ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PETERBOROUGH CLUB.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Curling Club was held last evening and was more largely attended than any previous meeting has ever been. The president occupied the chair. After the annual report, which indicated a very healthy state of affairs, had been read, the election of officers for the coming season was proceeded with. Judge Dennistoun and Mrs. Dennistoun were elected patron and patroness and Rev. J. W. R. Beck, chaplain. President, Dr. Boucher; Vice-President, George Dunsford. Representative members, Messrs. T. P. Attrill and J. H. Burnham. Secretary-Treasurer, C. McGill. Managing committee, W. G. Ferguson, Adam Hall, A. McNeil and C. McGill. Senior skips, T. P. Attrill, George Dunsford, Dr. Boucher, W. G. Ferguson, A. McNeil, Adam Hall, George Brown and T. Rutherford. Junior skips, George Fitzgerald, R. M. Hamilton, A. St. A. Smith and D. Cameron. Honorary members, John Ladgate and J. H. Burnham.

The club looks forward to a most successful season, there being more interest displayed in the "roarin' game," than has ever before been known so early in the season.

Football.

THE TEAM FOR TO-MORROW.

The team to play the Torontos on the Ashburnham grounds to-morrow has been chosen as follows:—

Forwards—Cooper, Forbes, Smith, Carnegie, Rush, Morris, Orde, Geale, Tytler. Quarterbacks—Carter, Hatton. Halfbacks Tanner, H. Rogers. C. A. Lawford, back. Spare men, Newbold and Stevenson.

The following are the Toronto men:—Bethune, Gordon, Muntz, Green, Torrance, Van Koughnet, Broughall, Boyd, L. Craig, Smith, Hime, Gilmour, McMurray, and two others.

Play will be begun at three o'clock and a rattling game is sure to follow. There should be a large turn out to witness the first match of the season.

New Furniture Store.

Messrs. Armstrong & Record have opened out new furniture warerooms on Simcoe street, in the shop between Messrs. Hall, Innes & Co.'s and the Ontario Bank, where they promise purchasers great value in Bedroom Suites, Sideboards, Centre Tables, Bureaus, Washstands, Spring Beds, Easy Chairs, Couches, &c. Specialties:—Ordered Work, Carpet laying and Repairing. Pay them a visit.

In Aid of the Protestant Home.

The above named institution being in want of means, the ladies of the committe have sanctioned the giving of a concert, to augment the funds. Mr. Bradburn has kindly given the Opera House for the occasion. The programme, which will appear in a few days will contain well know Peterborough names; and anyone desirous of helping our oldest charitable institution, and at the same time encouraging our local talent, can do so by being present at the concert on Thursday evening, October 22nd.

A Narrow Escape.

An Italian went into a leading hardware store on George street this morning, and asked to be shown some revolvers, and after selecting one, asked the clerk to let him fit a cartridge in the chamber. The clerk handed him one, which he inserted, and began fingering the hammer, evidently not being very well acquainted with the use of firearms. The clerk lost no time in placing himself wide of the pistol's range, but was none too soon, for the fumbling Italian let the hammer fall and the cartridge exploded, sending the bullet whizzing into the framework of a large show case, the glass of which was shattered. It was a narrow escape for the clerk, the bullet striking right in a line with the spot where a few seconds before he had been standing. The Italian paid for his pistol and the damage done, and took his departure.

Meritorous Music.

Handel Organ Recital at St. Paul's Church—A Great Success.

The first of the series of five classical organ recitals to be given during the coming season under Mr. J. S. Parker, was given last evening before a large and discriminating audience at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. The various recitations, arias, symphonies and choruses, as well as the organ solos, were taken from the masterpieces of Handel, and their selection reflects great credit upon the musical judgment of Mr. Parker, to whom also great praise is due for the admirable way in which the local singers who took part in the entertainment have been trained. The presence of Mrs Agnes C. Thompson of Toronto, Miss Swan and Mr. T. McCleneghan, of Woodstock, materially [illegible] evening. The entertainment was opened by an overture from the Messiah played in a masterly manner by Mr. Parker, and was followed by the recitative "Comfort Ye" and the aria "Every Valely," by Mr. Craven, and the chorus "Every Valley Shall be Exalted," by the choir. Mr. Craven, who has a most musical tenor voice, rendered the recitative and aria, in a most acceptable manner and with commendable expression, and the choir, in the chorus, "And the Glory," excelled themselves. The Organ Sonata, from the oratorio, Il Trionfo del Tempo, afforded another opportunity for a display of Mr. Parker's ability, and the rare qualities of the fine organ. All hearts were captivated by the sweetness with which Miss Swan sang "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," and the lady at once took a high place in the esteem of the audience. After a pastoral symphony, Miss Logan rendered the recitative and aria "Then Shall the Eyes," and "He Shall Feed His Flock," Mrs. Agnes Corlett Thompson taking the aria, "Come unto Him." Miss Logan's singing was greatly admired, and Mrs. Thompson's sweet and sympathetic voice showed to great advantage in her selection. Another organ solo succeeded, after which Mr. T. McCleneghan gave the stirring aria, "Arm, Arm ye Brave," from Judas Macabeus, with startling effect. Mr. McCleneghan has a powerful voice of great compass, and this spirited selection lost none of its force in hands. Mrs. Chambers took the recitative, "He was Cut Off," and the aria, "But Thou didst not Leave," in a sweet soprano voice, throwing great expression into them. After another organ solo, "Allegro from 4th Concert," the first part of the entertainment was brought to a close by Mrs. Thompson, who sang the aria, "How Beautiful are the Feet," in which her beautifully sympathetic voice, blending sweetly with the deep diapason of the organ, produced a magnificent effect, and was beyond all doubt the gem of the evening.

The second part of the recital was opened by Miss Haultain, who rendered the recitative "Behold a virgin," and the aria, "O thou that tellest," in her usual pleasing manner, being followed by the choir in the chorus "O thou that tellest."

A Duet by Mr. McCleneghan and Miss Swan, which had been substituted for an organ solo, was followed by the aria "Wait her Angels," in which Mrs. R. H. Dennistoun added to her already high reputation as a vocalist. Mrs. Agnes C. Thompson next sang the aria "From Mighty, Mighty Kings," scoring another triumph. Miss Swan's "I know that my Redeemer liveth," was succeeded by "Honor and arms," by Mr. McClenegham, and the aria from Sampson "Total Eclipse" by Mr. Craven. After the grand "Hallelajah Chorus" on the organ, the recital was closed by the united voices singing "God Save the Queen."

Mr. Parker is to be congratulated upon the great success of the first of his series of recitals and deserves the thanks of lovers of music for his great enterprise in providing such a musical treat. In the organ selections he showed himself to be a master of that grandest of instruments, and the admirable rendition of the various choruses by the choir, spoke volumes for his ability as a conductor. It is to be hoped that an even larger audience than that of last night will be present at the next recital.

Verdict for $1,000 Against the G. T. R.

SECOND DAY—FRIDAY.

The case of Clegg vs G. T. R. occupied the attention of Judge O'Connor and the jury until late last evening. The action was one brought by the mother of a young man named Clegg, a brakeman in the employ of the G. T. R., who, while coupling cars in the railway yard near Charlotte street, was caught in a frog and was injured by the cars so severely that he only lived a short time. Mr. C. W. Sawers solicitor for the plaintiff had retained the services of G. T. Blackstock, of Toronto, and Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, of McCarthy, Osler & Creelman, Toronto, appeared for the G.T.R. A number of witnesses who were present at the time of the occurrence were examined, all testifying very clearly as to the manner in which Clegg came by his death. The defence set up by Mr. Nesbitt was that no action could be brought in the case under the Ontario Statutes, and that even though it could, there was nothing to show that any negligence of the Company contributed to the accident, but that deceased met with the accident owing to an overwight of his own. The jury brought in a verdict of $1,000.

The Grand Jury were this morning dismissed from further attendance. They made the following

PRESENTMENT:

To Hon. Mr. Justice O'Connor:

The Grand Jurors of Her Majesty the Queen desire to make their presentment and to add their own congratulations to those of your Lordship on the freedom of the county from crime, as shown by the fact of their having only one criminal charge to deal with. In regard to your Lordship's reference to the confinement of lunatics in the common jail, the jury have to congratulate the county that the Ontario Government are taking as rapid steps as possible to provide additional accommodation for this unfortunate class, and are glad to be able to express the belief that before long the inmates now in the county jail will be removed to a proper place of confinement. The jurors have examined the jail and premises and find the place clean and in excellent order throughout.

The jury would ask your lordship to take into consideration the case of the prisoner now confined in the jail about 160 days, for want of sureties to keep the peace, and make such suggestions, as in your wisdom you may deem proper. In conclusion the grand jury would offer their congratulations to your lordship on your elevation to the bench and to welcome you on your first appearance in a judicial capacity in this county, and to express the hope that you may long be spared to fulfil the duties of the high position you occupy.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is stated that Sir John Macdonald will shortly leave for England, for the benefit of his health.

The keenness of the coming electoral battle in England may be judged by the fact that there are 1,125 candidates for the five hundred seats apportioned to that country.

Protection does not seem to fill the bill for the dwellers by the "sounding sea." The Halifax Nova Scotia Recorder says:—"We have been eighteen years tacked on to the Upper Provinces, and scarcely a product of our soil has found its way into their market. Scarcely a schooner has ever set sail for one of their ports. The fact is we are perishing for trade with the United States. For want of it our West India trade is ruined, our fisheries are stagnant, our lumbering trade is paralyzed, our agricultural industry is depressed.

Toronto aldermen propose visiting the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London next year. The Globe records the "fact" that the cost in whiskey and cigars of a trip by Toronto aldermen across the Bay in a yacht owned by one of themselves, as $1,100. Time, probably half an hour. Distance, two miles; and this fact suggests the following "idea": Distance from Toronto to Liverpool, about 4,000 miles. Time required for the journey, about eight days. Cost, estimated on the basis of the expenditure on the expedition across the Bay, $22,000.

Isn't it about time some of the N. P. promises were being redeemed? In 1879 Sir Leonard Tilley assured the credulous voter that a ballot for the N. P. would bring a boom in tall chimneys. Yet the tall chimneys are a rather short crop and the one we have in Peterborough hasn't smoked a whiff since the N. P. was adopted. Sir John said a policy of high taxation would raise prices for farm produce to "away up." Sir Charles Tupper in 1878 brought the sadly sold Bluenoses to support a protective tariff by the following assurance, "Only let us establish the National Policy, and within two years you shall have reciprocity." Tall taxation after seven years' run has brought no tall chimneys to boast of, no tall prices for grain and no reciprocity.

Snow symptoms.

Red coats sprinkle the landscape with the dash of color needed in our usually quiet tinted hamlet.

The W. C. T. U. of this place is quietly but steadily working on towards the desired end. There is not much use opposing a measure (or a theory) when the women of a nation unite in a body to carry it out. They will prevail. Moses Oates does not care for the attendance of many women at his lectures, their Keene appreciation of the truth in a speaker is too much for one of his inventive turn of mind. They read him and ridicule him, and he in return thinks "women out of place in a public discussion." Poor Moses! The surplus funds of the W.C.T.U. on hand—quite a little sum—are to be applied in helping to supply the needs of the Scott Act election.

The ladies of the Methodist Church in this place, under their usual indefatigable leader, Mrs. Harrison, are going to try and raise funds to build a school and lecture room in connection with the present church edifice. An album or autograph quilt, towards this purpose, is already in circulation by the young girls, and the dimes of all available acquaintances suffer in consequence. It is proposed to auction the quilt when finished, and truly it will be a quaint reminder of many people.

Mr. Wm. Stewart, of Port Huron, Mich., is at present on a visit to friends here.

Wm. Handcock, Esq., late of Port Huron, formerly of Toronto, and who was visiting for some time this summer with Mr. John McFee, sen., near this village, died last week and was buried with honors at Port Huron. He was honorably connected for many years with the G. T. Railway, in positions of trust and importance, and was highly regarded by his employers. His family are grown up and in good circumstances.

BAILLIEBORO.

Second Show of the Central.

Entries in Excess of Last Year—A Good Exhibit Throughout—The Full Prize List.

The success which attended the second annual exhibition of the united townships of South Monaghan, Cavan, Hope, Hamilton and North Monaghan Agricultural Society, at Baillieboro on Wednesday and Thursday, is a good guarantee that this institution is established on a permanent basis. As compared with last year, the entries showed an excess of over one hundred. The first day, marked by pleasant weather, was devoted chiefly to the arrangement of inside exhibits. On the second day there was a good attendance, which must have been made less by the raw, rainy weather that prevailed throughout the day. The Port Hope band furnished music. The exhibition of horses attracted great attention, and the forethought of the directors might well be copied by many. The horse ring was wired off, so that the track was left clear to its legitimate occupants.

The exhibit of horses both in the driving and carriage as well as in the general purpose classes was very good. In cattle, a good show of Durhams and Devons, together with some fine grades. The display of sheep was not as creditable in numbers as in quality, and the exhibit of poultry was small. Considerable excitement, which at one time threatened to culminate in fisticuffs, was aroused over the competition for the prizes for lady riders. The champions of the several competitors got terribly excited, and these being joined by their friends, a serious row was at one time imminent, but the better counsels of the peace-makers prevailed.

In waggons and buggies Mr. J. W. Lucas made a fine display, and Mr. Parker's show of harness was worthy of mention.

The directors deserve great credit for their excellent management, but the judges gave no end of trouble by their neglect to give the proper numbers in recording their judgements and if there are any errors or omissions in the prize list, as given below, the blame must rest upon the condition in which our reporter found the judges' books. Judges on receiving their pass books should also receive instructions to be careful to put down the numbers correctly.

Port Hope and Peterborough were respectively represented among the visitors by Mr. H. A. Ward, M.P., and a representative of the Times, and Mr. J. R. Stratton, of THE EXAMINER.

Melville Millar 1d

A LITTLE BLUE GLOVE.

"Oh! I can never forget it; never, never, never!" cried Millicent, rapturously, yet with a pathetic ring in her sweet, clear young voice. "It has been too delicious, too like a chapter out of the Arabian Nights. I felt exactly like Cinderella in the fairy books. One evening of light and splendor; one delicious waltz with a partner who seemed absolutely to float on wings; one glimpse of that great, palm-crowded conservatory, with the arched glass roof and the festoons of colored lamps! Wasn't it nice of Eleanor to lend me her blue crepe dress and satin shoes, and the old set of sapphires that came down to the family from nobody knows who! And now—oh, yes, the lights are out, and the ball bouquet faded, and it's ten o'clock of a snowy December day, and if I don't make haste I shall lose the train that's to carry me away from such things for ever! Oh, dear! oh, dear! why can't we live in fairy-land always?"

"Because," Eleanor Garthwaite solemnly made answer, "it is not in the nature of things."

But Millicent dreamed of that one glittering ball as the train sped past Kentish Town and Highgate, and flew shrieking on its way to the north. She never had been to a ball before, she probably never would see one again. Now she smiled to herself as she remembered how she had let her partner keep one of her little blue gloves—"As a souvenir," he had declared, laughingly.

"But he didn't know that I was going away so soon," said Millicent, sighing a little. "That it was my last appearance on any stage south of the Border. I wonder how many nights he will look out for me at the opera and at the balls and soiree and receptions before he gives me up? It was nice! And how divinely he waltzed! Cecil Grieve—it is such a pretty name, too. Well, good-bye, Cecil!"—with a wave of her hand toward the Babylon of today,—"I shall never see you again."

For Millicent was going to an altogether new life from that which she had led since her widowed mother's death, four years before, had left her so destitute that she was glad to accept the post of assistant-governess at the fashionable Brighton school where she had been educated. Four years of slights and drudgery had passed so, then came a letter from her mother's uncle, offering to provide for her future if she chose to accept the somewhat rough shelter of his home, a border farm, whereon he reared horses, and led a bachelor life.

The offer was kindly made, if in unpolished language, and Millicent had heard from her mother that Angus Carlyle had had no share in the estrangement that had made her a stranger to her family. She accepted the offer thankfully, almost gladly, and on her way to Scotland had stayed one night in London, and had been to a ball in her old school-fellow's new blue crepe dress. If she had descended into the Valley of Diamonds with Sinbad the Sailor, or gone behind the scenes in a fairy extravaganza, the scene could not have been newer or more delightful to her.

"It's an experience," said Millicent; "I'll put it down in my diary, with my first lover, my wedding, my first glimpse of the sea."

And all that weary journey, when the train seemed to oscillate along the flat plains, with never-resting persistency, she closed her eyes to think over the lights and the palm trees, the swaying strains of the band, and the scent of the gardenia in Cecil Grieve's button-hole.

Uncle Angus was a tall, bearded man, with grizzled hair, weather-beaten face, and a coat which looked as if it hadn't been brushed in a twelvemonth. He kissed his niece, helped her into a ricketty vehicle, and drove away through the snow to a plain, grey-stone farmhouse, where there was a fire as big as a blacksmithy, and a dinner of half raw steak and scorched potatoes.

Millicent was at first a little dismayed at the rough aspect of things in general, but after a very few days they wore a much different appearance under her management; and when summer came, the old farmhouse had been transformed into a bright little home, all aglow with the tokens of a woman's presence. To be sure it was lonely sometimes, but before long she grew to love the very solitude.

"Uncle Angus," she said, solemnly, "I like this place. I mean to stay here always with you."

"That will suit me well enough," said Uncle Angus. "But it ain't likely. Some fellow will come and snap you up."

Millicent laughed.

"There are no 'fellows' here," said she. "Unless you count Ostler Jack, at the 'Ecclefechan Arms,' or Daft Sandy, that goes about playing the bagpipes."

Uncle Angus said nothing. He only laughed and smoked on.

That night something occurred which roused the quiet household to active life. An accident on the railway which ran by the house scarcely a quarter of a mile away, though they were far distant from any station, filled it with a crowd of unexpected visitors. Fortunately all but one were so far uninjured as to be able to resume their journey next morning, but that one for days lay unconscious of all that was transpiring around him, in Angus Carlyle's house. And one morning in the yellow glow of early autumn, he seemed once more to emerge out of the troubled obscurity of fever dreams into the real world again.

"Where am I? What has become of her, you know who I mean, the girl I danced with—the girl in blue, with the little blue glove—where is she?"

"Eh?" said Uncle Angus, withdrawing his everlasting pipe from his mouth, and staring as if every one of his faculties were concentrated in the one sense of sight.

"That's quite right, Uncle Angus," said Millicent,—who had come into the room with a basket of wild flowers, which she had been gathering to brighten up the sick-room.—"I am the girl! I did dance with him in a blue dress once, in London; but I never expected thus to meet him again."

"Then it was not a dream?" said Cecil Grieve, putting out his transparent, skeleton-like hand, "and you were my guardian-angel after all?"

Scarcely a month had elapsed since that bright autumn morning, when Millicent wrote a long and confidential letter to her old schoolfellow Eleanor.

"To think," she said, "that I, who am of all persons the most prosaic and homespun, should have been living a real romance all these weeks! To think that he has loved me all this time! To think that the doctor says it was my nursing that saved his life! Oh, Nelly! Nelly! That one Cinderella night was the turning point of my destiny. And you are to come here. And Uncle Angus says he does not know what he shall do when I am gone. But of one thing, Nelly, I want you to be very, very sure: I am the happiest girl in the world. Yes, the very happiest."

Thus ended Millicent's life in a farmhouse, and thus began her new existence.

And Uncle Angus's sole comment was,—

"I said so, all along."

The Daily Examiner.

FRIDAY, OCT. 9, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

The Nicholls Hospital.

There will be a meeting at 3:30 this afternoon at the Nicholls Hospital of the trustees of that institution, and the members of the medical profession, the object being to make arrangements for medicial attendance. It is expected that some programme will be decided upon.

A Good Thing.

The new and popular Canadian Pacific Railway are going to run a personally conducted excursion to the Pacific coast on the 21st Oct. There are only a limited number of berths, so that immediate application should be made. All information as to routes, time, fares, etc., will be cheerfully supplied by Alex. Elliott, the reliable local ticket agent of the C. P. R.

Say!

Said a well-known citizen to Mr. Clegg this morning, "how long have you had the agency for those earth closets, I never knew they were to be had in town until I saw it in the EXAMINER a day or two ago. Why! its just the thing I have been wanting for use in the sick room for a long time, and did not know where to get it without sending away for it. Of course Mr. Clegg sold him one. So much for printer's ink.

A Rare Treat.

The citizens of Peterborough and vicinity are to be congratulated upon the treat in store for them. The unrivalled Telgmann sextette club, consisting of two sisters and four brothers, the family of the late Dr. Waldeck, of Germany, aided by Maggie Barr, the "queen of Scottish song, and Miss McGarry, elocutionist, considered the best public reader in the Dominion, will give one of their musical and literary evenings in the Bradburn Opera House on Tuesday evening, Oct. 13th. The programme is most varied, and gives assurance of being the most attractive ever presented to a Peterborough audience. The Guelph Daily Herald says: "The Telgmann Company's audience is never disappointed, but always from the first piece to the last listens with eager attention to the perfect execution of some of the master pieces of the greatest musicians, while their rendering of Scotch and Irish airs calls forth a perfect hurricane of applause."

A Strange Arrest.

The villagers of Baillieboro were yesterday thrown into a state of excitement by the arrest of Mr. D. Sayles, who, about a year and a half ago came to the village from Warkworth, and with Mr. George Berry, a merchant of Centreville as his partner, entered into business as general storekeepers. They seemed to prosper and were successful in building up a good patronage and were looked upon as reliable citizens. The constable from Cobourg, who yesterday arrested Mr. Sayles and took him to that town, gave no information whatever as to what was the reason of the arrest. The only circumstance that seemed to throw any light on the subject is the following story which is being circulated among the villagers. About two months ago Mr. Sayles, in the presence of his clerk, placed $17 in a letter directed to a wholesale firm in Montreal and sent it to be posted and registered by his clerk. On the letter coming to hand at Montreal, it was found that the money had disappeared. This led to an enquiry which brought the P. O. inspector to Baillieboro to investigate the matter, who, after taking a statement from Postmaster Perrin and from Mr. Sayles in reference to the matter, left, nothing further having been heard of the matter. The villagers are now speculating as to whether there is any connection between this matter and Mr. Sayles' arrest, as there is nothing else known of that affords any ground for conjecture. The true inwardness of the story will no doubt transpire in a few days.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

Handsome Show Rooms.

Opening of J. C. Turnbull's New and Extensive Millinery Rooms.

The handsome and spacious new show rooms of J. C. Turnbull, opening on Simcoe street and adjoining his George street store, were yesterday thrown open for the inspection of his new stock of novelties and staples in fall and winter millinery and mantles. The rooms, which are among the largest of their kind in town, are luxuriously carpeted and fitted up in the most approved and modern style, the walls being adorned with handsome English plate mirrors, framed in dark woods, in addition to which are heavy cheval swinging glasses standing on the floor. The rich display of costly materials hanging from the walls and shelves, enlivened by the brilliant hues of the numerous feather, lace and other trimmings, create a beautiful effect, the various colors having been arranged in happy harmony with each other, and the colors predominant in the fittings of the show room. The millinery tables are covered by a profusion of all the latest styles in ladies and children's hats, bonnets, hoods and caps, in all the colors now fashionable, while the counters and shelves contain a stock of materials and trimmings of every kind, hardly to be equalled in the millinery establishments of larger towns.

The mantle making department has been given special attention, the stock being replete with all the most fashionable and serviceable materials, which are cut and made up to order in the most approved styles. The assortment of ready made mantles, too, is an exceedingly large and well chosen one.

There being two entrances to the show rooms, make them exceedingly convenient for purchasers, who having passed through the store and show room, can find ready egress through the Simcoe street door, without the trouble of retracing their steps through the crowded store. The opening display continues to-day and to-morrow, when the attentive ladies and gentlemen who preside over this model establishment, will no doubt have their time fully occupied by the crowds of purchasers who will be attracted thither.

St. Luke's C. E. T. S.

Second Annual Meeting—Gratifying Progress—A Most Successful and Flourishing Organization.

The second annual meeting of St. Luke's C. E. T. S. was held on Tuesday evening, the 6th, inst. The anniversary exercises consisted of a devotional service, arranged with reference to the objects of the society, and an excellent address by Rev. J. Farncomb, of Lakefield. Then followed the reading of the reports giving an account of the society's proceedings, and the result of its work, financially and otherwise. The attendance was very fair, the singing good, and the service was heartily joined by all present. There are appended some interesting particulars from the reports of the secretary and treasurer. The former begins by heartily congratulating the society on continued growth and prosperity during the past year (second) of its existence, much good having been accomplished for the cause of temperance, and the influence and example of the members having been felt in the congregation. The report refers to the dual pledge and the co-operation of moderate users and total abstainers, as a condition recognized by many of all denominations as the best and most Scriptural method of promoting true temperance, and to the determination of the society to extend its usefulness in every way during the coming year. The adoption of the Scott Act may, the report suggests, provide even a larger sphere for true temperance work. The total membership of St. Luke's branch is 108, a considerable gain, in spite of removals, withdrawals and lapsed membership, over last year. These figures do not include 80 members in the Band of Hope, a juvenile branch of the society.

The regular meetings have been well attended, as also were two interesting lectures given under the auspices of the society during the year. Several socials were also held, and an admirable temperance address delivered by Rev. S. Weston-Jones. These special gatherings have kept the society prominently before the public, and drawn the members of the congregation closer to one another.

On the completion of the new school room a more ambitious series of public entertainments may be looked for. The report thus concludes. "Looking back we can see faults and failures; but we can also see encouragements and blessings. And so we may 'thank God' and, looking forward, 'take courage.'"

The treasurer's report showed that the total receipts for the year were $198.83 and the expenditure $178.80, leaving a credit balance of $20.

OFFICERS FOR 1885-86.

The following is a list of the officers for the current society year:—

PRESIDENT.—Rev. W. C. Bradshaw.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.—Messrs. H. Nesbitt, F. Hall and R. B. Rogers.

SECRETARY.—Frank Adams.

ASSISTANT-SECRETARY.—J. J. Rooney.

TREASURER.—W. Maniece.

ORGANISTS.—Mrs. Jackson and Miss Eva Tivey.

COMMITTEE.—Mrs. Bradshaw, Mrs. Jackson, Miss Smith, Miss L. Graham, Miss A. Chrow, Miss Eva Tivey and Messrs. W. Packenham, B. Everett, W. Wallbrook, J. F. Ellenborough and F. H. Adams.

Poetical Justice.

Mr. Wm. Telford the poet of Smith, some time since was bitten by a dog owned in Bridgenorth. He brought suit against the owner of the animal, and at the Division Court here to-day, the jury gave him a verdict of $60 damages.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

The Calcutt Cup.

The Calcutt Cup, to be presented by Mr. Harry Calcutt to the prize stallion in the recent competition at the Central Fair, has been received and is now on exhibition in Mr. Melville Millar's window. It is a handsome silver cup, engraved with a horse's head, and surmounted with a figure of a jockey holding a whip and bridle.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

TOWN COUNCIL.

Much Discussion on Minor Matters.

Public Vaccination.

The Fire Department Gets Another Racket.

The adjourned meeting of the Town Council was held last evening, when all the members were present and the Mayor in the chair. After reading and confirmation of minutes the following were read.

From Dr. Clarke, Medical Health Officer, calling attention to the great number of unvaccinated people in town and the danger arising from it, and urging public vaccination.

From T. H. Thornton, asking an additional $100 on account of repairs to Smith street bridge.—Received.

From T. G. Hazlitt, in reference to the dangerous condition of the bridge at Clegg's Ontario Mills.—Street Inspector.

From Mrs. J. G. Hall, regarding an aged man named O'Connor.—Charity Committee with power to act.

From J. H. Roper and others, requesting the laying of a sidewalk on Downie street.—Street and Bridge Committee. To report.

From P. H. Thornton, asking a license to carry on business as a butcher at the corner of Reid and McDonnell streets.—Granted.

From W. J. McNamara, requesting that the corporation supply him with planking, &c., for a drain on Park street.—Street and Bridge Committee with power to act.

ACCOUNTS.

The following accounts were read:—

A. McDonald, lumber	$323 34
Water Works, for hydrants	850 00
Constable Adams, on account of enforcing cow by-law and as sanitary officer	62 50
Constable Pidgeon, same	63 50
Review, printing	55 26
EXAMINER	151 03
J. W. Flavelle	2 50
G. T. R., per T. Menzies	116 58
Melville Millar	38 70
J. D. Craig, horse hire for hose cart	1 00

The accounts of A. McDonald, the EXAMINER and Review, and J. W. Flavelle were ordered to be paid, those of the water works, G. T. R. and Melville Millar and Constables Adams and Pidgeon referred to Finance Committee. The latter accounts gave rise to some discussion, Messrs. Kendry and Douglas being in favor of their claim and Messrs. McNaughton and Rutherford holding that the officers were entitled to no extra allowance.

A communication from Mr. McPherson, in reference to a G. T. R. switch that had been put in on Bethune street near the Stove Works, was read and Mr. McPherson heard on the subject, which was referred to the Finance Committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Committee on Finance reported, recommending payment of accounts as follows: S. J. Bell, $100; A. Elliott, $2.40; Times Printing Co., $15.54; Kingan & Co., $41.35; Lockhart & Chowen, $77.95; G.T.R., 30c. Report adopted.

The Committee on Fire, Water and Light reported the following:—"Your committee beg to report and recommend that the petition of R. Kingan and others, asking the corporation to take charge of the electric light on Hunter street, be granted, so soon as their contract with the Electric Light Company expires; the company is requested to move one light and place it at the intersection of Hunter and Water streets, also one light at the centre between George and Aylmer.

The Clerk is authorized to notify the Gas Company to discontinue the light of gas lamps between Aylmer and Water streets, on Hunter street, on and after January 1st.

They also report the guarantee of the Montreal Hose Company is in the hands of the Clerk, and that one from the Toronto is expected in a few days.

This report was provocative of a long discussion, during which Mr. Kelly put forward a claim for a lamp on Court House hill. Messrs Cahill and Hartley thought the residents of Hunter street had petitioned to be allowed to have the electric lights at their own expense and should not try now to shift them on to the town.

Mr. Green thought Hunter street was as well entitled to the light as George street.

Mr. Douglas thought if this was done, every street in town might make a similar demand.

Mr. Menzies said if the Hunter street people didn't like the present condition of things, the electric lamps should be removed altogether.

Mr. Yelland believed that the electric light was increasing the cost of lighting instead of lessening it as promised.

Mr. Kelly moved in amendment "that the report of the Fire, Water and Light committee be amended by inserting 'that a gas lamp be erected at the corner of Sheridan and Brock streets.'"

Mr. Cahill moved in amendment to the amendment "that the report be referred back to the committee with a view to their making a more equitable distribution of light."

The amendment to the amendment was put and lost, the amendment shared a similar fate, and on the motion to adopt the report being put, it also was voted down.

On motion, a by-law granting $100 to the Mechanics Institute, was put through its different stages, and placed on the by-law book.

STATE OF THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

On motion, Mr. James Stevenson addressed the Council in reference to the state of affairs prevailing in the fire department. He said that at the recent fire on Bethune street there was not enough hose to reach his building on the opposite side of the street, though there was immediate danger to it, and it was only saved from catching fire by water poured on it from pails. The engineer had told him that the coupling on the new hose did not fit the hydrants. The Grand Trunk had supplied a length of hose, and he went to the engineer to get another, to enable him to reach his building, and could not get it. The result was that the property was totally unprotected. He thought something was wrong somewhere. Either the hydrants should be made to fit the hose, or the hose to fit the hydrants.

Mr. McNaughton thought there was not sufficient water pressure, and that the company should be compelled to keep up a pressure of fifty or sixty pounds all the time.

Mr. Rutherford explained that the Maltese cross hose lately purchased had the Toronto coupling, and that he endeavoured to have the coupling made uniform, and had been thwarted in his efforts; it certainly was not from any neglect on his part that the department was inefficient.

Mr. Menzies moved, "that the coupling on the Maltese cross hose be taken off at once, and coupling uniform with those on the old hose be put on, so that the hose and hydrants be used together, and that such couplings be procured as will fit the hydrants."

Mr. Kendry was in favor of reversing the process, and thought it would have been better to get 1,000 feet of the new hose. This hose was in use at the Auburn Mills, Hamilton's and Brodie's, and if the coupling were adopted the town hose might, in case of a big fire, be augmented by the hose from those establishments. To make the hydrants fit would only need a change of the nipple, at a cost of 25c. each. We should never know how much we needed hose until broke out.

Mr. Hartley was in favor of the most modern coupling being adopted.

After some further discussion the matter was referred back to the Committee on Fire, Water and Light.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. Hartley moved, seconded by Mr. Kendry,—"That the Street Inspector be instructed to open out and grade Sperry street, as agreed by this Council last spring."—Carried.

Mr. Cahill, seconded by Mr. Davidson, moved,—"That a sidewalk be laid down on Stewart street, from the south end of the present walk to the stove foundry."—Carried.

Mr. Rutherford, seconded by Mr. Menzies, brought in the following resolution, which was carried:—"That the Clerk be authorized to prepare a by-law in accordance with the Statute, to prevent dangerous explosives inside the corporation, or passing through it."

On motion of Mr. Davidson, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, it was resolved that the clerk should notify the superintendent of the C.P.R. that if the costs re Wolfe street were not at once paid, the account would be handed to the solicitor for collection.

A resolution moved by Mr. Menzies, that licensed carters be compelled to wear badges, and that the clerk be instructed to ascertain prices and report to the council, was carried.

A somewhat lengthy discussion in regard to the return of the collectors roll followed after which Dr. Clarke addressed the council in reference to

PUBLIC VACCINATION.

He pointed out the danger that exists of the infection being brought here by lumbermen on their way to the woods, who frequently stayed here several days. His object was to put the matter plainly before the council in order that if any outbreak occurred he might not be blamed.

In answer to a question by Mr. Rutherford, he said that on the whole he thought the sanitary condition of the town was very good as was shown by the small amount of sickness and the number of doctors who left the town.

After some discussion it was resolved that the town physician and medical health officer appoint places in the different wards for vaccinating, the charge to be 25c each, and any person not able to pay for the same be charged to the town.

Mr. Edmison addressed the Council at some length in regard to the matter previously referred to but it having been referred to a committee, no action was taken.

The Council adjourned till next Tuesday evening, when the new by-law in reference to the Dickson exemptions will be submitted.

Giving in Marriage.

Come, let us sit together for a space,
In this still room remote from friendly mirth,
Afar from light and music, face to face,
Each unto each the dearest thing on earth.
Love, they have left us, our two bonny brides,
Our tall, grave girl, our winsome, laughing pet;
Ah me! How wide the chasm that divides
Our life from theirs; how far their feet are set
From the calm path they trod with us so long.
How we shall miss them, we who loved them so,
On winter nights when winds are blowing strong,
On summer mornings, when the roses blow.
But—happy but—we still clasp hand in hand,
Nye still meets eye and true hearts understand.

Love, they have left us empty of the mirth
That cheered our homestead while they sojourned here;
Yea, they have left us lonely on the earth,
Lone, but together, solitude most dear;
Ah, God, go with them to the stranger nests,
That love has built for them and theirs to come.
God, keep all warm and living in their breasts
Love's holy flame, the altar-fire of home.
Dear, they have left us; we no longer hold
The first, best place, however leal each heart.
Yet have we treasure left, refined gold,
Love's sterling ore, without its baser part,
The wide old house has lost its nestling birds,
But we are left. Ah, love, what need of words?

—All the Year Round.

Don't Sign Papers.

People who thoughtlessly sign documents often put their property in peril, and many men have been ruined by indorsing for a friend. How often have good-natured men's fortunes been diminished by obligations incurred carelessly or without thought of consequences. During the rebellion the steamer Jessie was seized because it was supposed she was a blockade runner. The case was delayed in the courts for eighteen years, a fact which is very discreditable to our lawyer rulers. In the meantime all the parties defending the ownership of the vessel had disappeared. The only responsible person that could be found was a young girl of seventeen, whose father was on one of the bonds. An obligation of seventy thousand dollars has been rolled up, which this young woman will be forced to pay unless the law somehow interposes to save her. She will be ruined financially, as that sum is greater than her inheritance. Here is a case in which a person is punished who is entirely innocent of any offence. But the moral of this instance is: Don't put your name on bonds or notes, for it may injure not only yourself, but your innocent children.

Three Meals a Day.

An English writer gives some much-needed advice as to the times and frequency of meals. In his opinion the present usual practice of three meals a day has good reason, as well as custom, in its favor. When work of any kind is being done, whether mental or bodily, the intervals between taking food should not be so long as to entail demands on the system when its store of material for the generation of force is exhausted. An ordinary full meal, in the case of a healthy man, is generally considered to have been completely digested and to have passed out of the stomach in four hours. A period of rest should then be granted to the stomach. Assuming that two hours are allowed for this, the interval between one meal and another would be six hours; and this accords with the experience of most men. During rest and sleep there is less waste going on, and especially during sleep there is greatly diminished activity of all the functions of the body. The interval, therefore, between the last meal of one day and the first of the next may be longer, as it generally is, than between the several day meals. Assuming that breakfast be taken about 8 or 9 o'clock, there should be a mid-day meal about 1 or 2. The character of this must depend on the nature of the day's occupation and the convenience of the individual. With women and children this is generally their hungry time, and the mid-day repast, whether called luncheon or dinner, is the chief meal. So it is with the middle and laboring classes, for the most part. But for merchants, professional men and others, whose occupations take them from home all the day, this is inconvenient, and moreover, it is not found conducive to health or comfort to take a full meal in the midst of the day's work. There can, however, be no doubt that much evil arises from attempting to go through the day without food, and then with exhausted powers sitting down to a hearty meal. Something of a light, easily digestible, but sustaining character should be taken toward 1 or 2 o'clock.

I referred lately to a case of triplets in Scotland. But this is nothing in comparison with the prolificness of a Russian, according to the following extract from the Scots Magazine, March, 1755: "There was lately presented to the empress of Russia a laboring man who has had two wives, the first of whom brought him four times four children at a birth, seven times thrice, and ten times two. The second wife has lain in seven times; the first time she brought forth three children and the other six times two. The whole number of children by the two wives amount to seventy-two.—London Truth.

ANNUAL EXHIBITION.

Smith, Ennismore and Lakefield Agricultural Society.

Splendid Weather—A Successful Exhibition—The Prize List.

The annual exhibition of the above society was held in the village of Lakefield, on Thursday and Friday, and the directors and public were favored with glorious weather. The first day, as usual, was devoted to the arrangement of exhibits in the hall and the judging of articles. In the evening the public were admitted to the hall and a large number took advantage of the opportunity of quietly admiring the exhibits. The ladies' work showed a considerable falling off in the number of entries, the fact being due, no doubt, to the directors exacting observance of the rule that articles which had once been exhibited and awarded prizes, were not eligible for another year. The quality, as may have been expected, was rather superior to the displays, in this line, of other years.

The show of roots, vegetables, dairy produce and grains was very good, especially of the latter, as may be gathered from the fact that some of the grain which took first prize at the Peterborough Central did not get a place at all at the Lakefield show.

In sewing machines, Mr. G. A. Mitchell showed one of his Wheeler & Wilson machines, and Messrs. D. Smart & Son were on hand with three of the New Improved Williams. The latter firm also exhibited three of their Karn organs, and the hall during the afternoon was made resonant with the sweet strains, drawn from them under the skilful manipulation of Mr. C. C. Hampshire, organist of St. John's church, Peterborough. Mr. R. Graham & Son, Lakefield, also showed three fine Woodstock organs.

The outside exhibit showed a general falling off as compared with former years in the number of entries, but in other respects it was superior. There was a fair exhibit of horned cattle, sheep and pigs. There were several fine Durhams, and comparatively few grades shown; thus showing that in the matter of breeding, thoroughbred stock is on the increase. There was a good exhibit of pigs, and in poultry, Mr. T. E. Bell, of Smith, was the principal exhibitor.

In horses, the display was creditable, but the roadsters were not well represented. There was not one really first-class roadster shown. This circumstance, if it indicates anything, shows that farmers are paying more attention to the breeding of agricultural stock. There was a good exhibit of foals and one and two year old colts.

The directors desire to take this medium of thanking Messrs. D. Smart & Son for supplying the excellent music on their Karn organs, which added greatly to the enjoyment of the visiting public.

We understand the net receipts of the exhibition are in excess of any previous year, to the amount of nearly $50.

The exhibition was largely attended, the weather was singularly auspicious and the directors were happy. Much credit is due the president, Mr. G. W. Fitzgerald, the secretary, Mr. M. S. Dean, and the directors, for the success of the exhibition, on which they are to be congratulated. The following is Curiosities of Nature.

In Bedford county, Va., there stands a chestnut tree that is twenty-seven feet around.

A Chinese yam in an Ithaca (N. Y.) garden is growing at the rate of five inches a day.

In Jefferson county, Mo., a parsnip fifty inches long and fifteen inches in circumference was grown.

At the Tokay vineyard, near Fayetteville, N. C., is a vine twenty-five years old, which bore over 100 bushels of grapes.

A large farm near Stockton, Cal., has been completely cleaned of its crops by millions of little birds no larger than a man's thumb.

The Arctic raspberry is one of the smallest plants known. A six-ounce vial will hold the whole plant, branches, leaves and all.

A watermelon vine grown by the Reems brothers, of Harris Co., Ga., is 1,700 feet long, and it has produced 400 pounds of melons.

The famous Bidwell Bar orange tree in California is twenty-five feet tall, and its trunk is forty-five inches in circumference. It bore last year 2,075 oranges.

The largest apple ever grown in America came from Nebraska, and weighed 29½ ounces. The Smithsonian Institution has a model of this apple.

In a garden at Bowling Green, Ky., is a bush that bears a large deep red rose, with two perfect small roses in the center which are miniature copies of the big one.

On the table lands on Southwestern Arizona, at an altitude of 8,000 to 12,000 feet, a species of wild potato grows which is said to be superior in taste and flavor to the best cultivated potatoes.

John H. Parnell's peach orchard at West Point, Ga., is the largest in the world. The trees are planted upon different slopes, so that when all are bearing a crop is certain in one place or another every year. There are 125,000 trees.

AN IRISHMAN'S ADVENTURE

The sun was sinking over the pretty little town of Setubal, in the west of Portugal, and its last rays lighted up a very stirring and picturesque scene. Along the banks of the stream that ran through the great plain beyond the town there seemed to be a monster picnic going on, and, stranger still, a picnic made up entirely of soldiers. Camp fires were sending up their thin blue smoke into the bright evening sky. Muskets were "stacked" on every side like sheaves of corn, and men in gay uniforms were bustling around to and fro, carrying bread and ration beef, hunting for fuel, or fetching water from the river.

But the strangest thing of all was that the men on one side of the stream were all dressed in red, and those on the other side in blue. In fact, the French and English soldiers who had been fighting before Setubal were making friends during a short truce, and having their supper together. The French tried to talk English, the English and Irish to talk French, and many a shout of good-humored laughter arose over each other's mistakes.

A tall, sinewy, bright-eyed "Tipperary boy"—one of the famous Irish brigade which acquired such a terrible renown in this very war—was dipping his hot face in the stream, when a voice from the opposite bank shouted:

"Hoil Monsieur Patreek, you come here; I give you some suppare."

"Who's that, annyway, Pat?" asked Patrick's rear-rank man, Denis Moriarity.

"'Who's that,' is it? Sure he's a broth of a boy intirely, whoever he is. 'Twas he that gev me this little remimbrance yisterday" (pointing to a fearful gash in his cheek); "and, by the same token, I wrote my name on that arrum he's got tied up there. Come an' and I'll inthrojuce yez to him."

A very merry party the three made. The French trooper wound up the supper with a French song, and Paddy gave him one in Irish, and they parted the best of friends; but Pat whispered in Moriarity's ear; "It's an illigant supper we've had, Dinny; but thim same chaps will be afther givin us a hot breakfast in the mornin'."

O'Callaghan's prophecy proved true enough. At daybreak the English outposts were driven in by a large body of French skirmishers, and the battle soon became general along the whole line. The twenty-eighth were in the thickest of the fight, as usual, and twice repulsed the attack of a French grenadier regiment. As the enemy fell back the second time, the hot Irish blood could stand it no longer, and out rushed the twenty-eighth men in pursuit, although their officers, seeing the danger, called loudly to them to halt.

But it is no easy matter to stop an Irishman when in chase of an enemy, and the "boys of the ould brigade" followed the pursuit so far that they got scattered, and fell into disorder. At that moment the French dragoons came down upon them like a whirlwind, and Paddy O'Callaghan, after fighting like a hero, and knocking down men right and left, as if he had been at Donnybrook fair, found himself separated from his comrades, and right in among the enemy.

Just then a riderless horse came flying past, and Pat, making a sudden spring, clutched the reins, and was just going to scramble on its back, when he heard his name called, and looking down, saw at his feet the burly form of Denis Moriarity.

"Are ye hurt, Dinny?" asked O'Callaghan, tenderly.

"They've bruk my arrum, the vagabones!" growled Moriarity, in a voice hoarse with pain. "It's little use I'll be now, at all, at all!"

"But can yet sit a horse, me boy? It's wid yer legs ye do that, shure—not wid yer arrums."

"Is it 'sit a horse' ye mane?" rejoined Moriarity, disdainfully. "Faith, thin, jist git me me wanst on the baste's back, and av he's as wild as Barney O'Toole's pig, I'll stick on him."

Without another word, Pat lifted his wounded comrade into the saddle, and away went the horse and Denis, who, as he had said, stuck to his seat as if he had been glued.

But Paddy's generous self-devotion seemed likely to cost him dear, for at that instant five of the French dragoons, catching sight of his red jacket, came charging down upon him all at once.

"Five to wan, is it?" muttered Paddy. "Och, it's sartain the thieves have larned their arithmotic, and know that wan Irish boy is as good as five Frinchmin anny day. But ye don't git me so aisy, ye frog-aiten' spalpeens."

With one bound he was behind the trunk of a huge cork-tree that stood near, from which ready-made intrenchment the barrel of his musket poked out so threatningly that the Frenchmen pulled rather hastily.

"What's the matter wid yes?" shouted O'Callaghan. "Come an, thin, like dacent boys. Don't ye see me here waitin' to spake wid yes?"

One of the dragoons fired his pistol, but the shot only drew a taunting laugh from our hero, while the threatening muzzle fronted them at every turn, face which way they would. Evidently Paddy was master of the situation, and the mischevious twinkle of his blue eyes showed how thoroughly he enjoyed it.

But now the dragoons, enraged at being held at bay so long by one man, divided their forces, two wheeling toward one side of the tree and two toward the other, while the fifth came straight forward. Matters seemed likely to go hard with poor Pat, when suddenly the air was rent with the war-cry of the Irish brigade, "Faugh-a-ballagh!" (Clear the way), and on came the twenty-eighth once more, their long line of bayonets glittering through the smoke like sunbeams breaking a mist.

At sight of the coming help Paddy's bold blood was up at once. Out he darted upon his assailants with a flourish of his musket and a real Irish "hurroo," which was sufficient to frighten the whole cavalry of the imperial guard.

It did scare the horse of the nearest French dragoon, which reared and fell heavily, rider and all. Before the Frenchman could rise again, O'Callaghan's foot was on his breast, and held the ear," as Paddy afterward said, till the men of the twenty-eighth came up and helped him to secure his prisoner.

"Well done, my fine fellow," said the old colonel of the twenty-eighth, when he heard the story of Pat's exploit. "Here's a guinea for you, and well you've earned it. But why didn't you give those rascals one shot at the last, when you had the chance?"

"Sure for the best of all raisons, yer honor," answered Pat, with a grin; "there was nothing in the gun, at all, at all."

And ever after that day, when any man made a great show of learning upon a subject about which he really knew nothing at all, the officers of the twenty-eighth used to say that he was like Pat O'Callaghan's musket.—Harper's Magazine.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El [illegible]dre" brands of cigars which have stood the [illegible] for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

Equal to City Work.

The Bowmanville Statesman says:—"We have received from the Peterborough EXAMINER book bindery our two volumes of Picturesque Canada, handsomely and substantially bound. The EXAMINER bindery turns out work quite equal in every respect to the city offices."

Lacrosse Men, Attention.

There will be a meeting of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club held on Monday evening at the Little Windsor Hotel, for the purpose of winding up business for the season. It is most important that every one should be present, and it is to be hoped there will be a large attendance.

New Furniture Store.

Messrs. Armstrong & Record have opened out new furniture warerooms on Simcoe street, in the shop between Messrs. Hall, Innes & Co.'s and the Ontario Bank, where they promise purchasers great value in Bedroom Suites, Sideboards, Centre Tables, Bureaus, Washstands, Spring Beds, Easy Chairs, Couches, &c. Specialties:—Ordered Work, Carpet laying and Repairing. Pay them a visit.

A Good Thing.

The new and popular Canadian Pacific Railway are going to run a personally conducted excursion to the Pacific coast on the 21st Oct. There are only a limited number of berths, so that immediate application should be made. All information as to routes, time, fares, etc., will be cheerfully supplied by Alex. Elliott, the reliable local ticket agent of the C. P. R.

The Professor's Performance.

Professor Reid, the swordsman, went up to the Lakefield Fair yesterday and in the evening gave an exhibition in the town hall of his wonderful skill in the use of the broad sword, performing a number of clever feats, much to the delight of the audience that filled the hall. He also showed the lightning Zouave drill. He has been engaged to give an exhibition at the Norwood show on the 13th and 14th.

Boating Club Meeting.

A meeting of the Peterborough Boating Club will be held at the office of Messrs. Hatton & Wood on the evening of Wednesday, Oct. 14th, for the purpose of considering the affairs of the club. Owing to the large expenditure in sending crews to different regattas, the finances of the club have been for some years past crippled. It is to be hoped there will be a large attendance of members present and past, and that the result of the meeting will be a fresh impetus given to aquatic, and the club's finances placed upon a solid basis.

The Nicholls Hospital.

The trustees of the hospital, according to appointment, assembled there yesterday afternoon for the purpose of meeting members of the medical profession for the purpose of conferring with a view to arranging a scheme for medical attendance. Owing to the fact that nearly all the medical gentlemen in town were engaged in giving testimony in the Sheridan-Pigeon case, there was no representation of them present and nothing was done. It is not likely that any further steps will be taken before the transfer of the hospital to the town has been legally consummated.

The Assizes.

Verdict for $400 in Sheridan v. Pigeon—Provencan v. McCann in Progress.

THURSDAY—FRIDAY.

The Court was occupied till late last evening with the case of Sheridan v Pidgeon, an action for damages brought by the plaintiff, a lady music teacher, against Dr. Pidgeon for alleged malpractice. The plaintiff broke her arm near the shoulder, and Dr. Pidgeon was her medical attendant. It was claimed on behalf of plaintiff that owing to improper surgical treatment by defendant, the plaintiff had lost the use of her arm. Messrs. Stone and Masson acted for plaintiff, and Nesbitt, Toronto, and R. E. Wood for deft.

The jury brought in a verdict stating their opinion that the defendant made a mistake in not having called in skilled assistance, but not wilfully or through intent, and awarded plaintiff $400 damages.

The opinion prevails in legal circles that the verdict will be set aside in term, as the mistake mentioned does not give any ground for action. A motion will be made in term to set aside the judgment.

What We May Expect.

The winding up meeting of the Lacrosse Club at the Little Windsor Hotel on Monday evening.

And every member to make a point of attending it.

An adjourned Council meeting on Tuesday evening.

Moderate to fresh south-west and south-east winds, fine warm weather.

We would Like to Know

How the licensed carters will like being ticketed and numbered.

Whether the Maltese Cross hose will be made to fit the hydrants or the hydrants to fit the hose.

What would happen if we had a really big fire.

How many citizens will avail themselves of free vaccination.

What they are Saying.

Mr. Parker may feel just pride in the emphatic success of his first concert in Peterborough this season.—The Toronto Globe.

We'll have no more dynamite carted through the streets when my by-law is passed.—Councillor Menzies.

The Barnardo Home owes very much to the large heartedness and Christian philanthropy of Mr. G. A. Cox.—The Toronto Globe.

Saved Army.

Meetings are getting lively in the Saved Army now. The new officer, Capt. Carter, uses a tambourine and is a good one, also a very pleasant singer. The Army meets at 7 o'clock this evening in their Gospel Hall and will proceed to the Midland station, where they will receive their new officers, and, returning to the hall, will hold the usual meeting. Two mass meetings will be held tomorrow (Sunday) afternoon and evening in Bradburn's Opera House, new officers to have charge.

New Photographic Studio.

Mr. E. H. Green, formerly of Little's Photograph gallery, has opened out a new Photograph Studio in the flat on George street, over Ruth's confectionery store. The rooms, are large, light, airy and well furnished. The reception room is 20x20 feet, to which adjoins a well lighted dressing room; reception room gives access by an arched opening to a handsome operating room, with ample light 40x20 feet in area. This room is is elegantly furnished with six outdoor and indoor scenes, half a dozen handsome chairs, stands, tables, balustrades, columns, stairways and other necessary accessories. In the front of the rooms, which are en suite is the printing room. Altogether the premises are excellently adapted to the business, and when they are thrown open to the public on Wednesday next, it is probable that very many will take advantage of the opportunity of securing the work of an artist, who has already achieved a reputation for first-class work.

A Rare Treat.

The citizens of Peterborough and vicinity are to be congratulated upon the treat in store for them. The unrivalled Telgmann sextette club, consisting of two sisters and four brothers, the family of the late Dr. Waldeck, of Germany, aided by Maggie Barr, the "queen of Scottish song, and Miss McGarry, elocutionist, considered the best public reader in the Dominion, will give one of their musical and literary evenings in the Bradburn Opera House on Tuesday evening, Oct. 13th. The programme is most varied, and gives assurance of being the most attractive ever presented to a Peterborough audience. The Hamilton Times says of Miss Barr:—"Her singing was the gem of the evening; it was perfect in every way. The Montreal Gazette says of Miss McGarry:—Miss McGarry reads with spirit and effect, giving to her words an intense reality, which carries the minds of the vast assemblies over time and space to the actual scene." The Belleville Ontario says:—"One of the best concerts ever given in the city."

The Chinese have a hard row to hoe. They are barred out of every other country, and now France wants to drive them out of China.

A man who had never seen a railroad was being shown one by his friend, and inquired the meaning of W and R on the posts. The friend told him they stood for "ring" and "whistle." He said he could see that using spells ring, "but how do you get whistle out of R?"

"Talk about your charitable women," said a Washington avenue man; "why my wife is so charitable that she gives tramps all the clothes I don't happen to be wearing, and I firmly believe that if a female tramp would call and ask for a husband she would give me away."

We are pleased to announce that the usual number of college graduates this year will embrace the profession of journalism. Whether the embrace will be returned can be ascertained in a few short sunny months by taking another census of the street-corner bummers.—Lowell Citizen.

A Russian is not legally a man until he is 26 years old. Fancy a Russian mother saying, "Alvirawiska, who was that sitting so close on the sofa with you last night?" and Alvi replying, "Only Chipmunkiwiskis, a little boy from over the way. We were celebrating his twenty-fifth birthday.

A little Rhode Island girl was taken by her mother to a dentist, who removed a tooth. Of course the operation caused a great deal of pain. How deeply the feelings of the little one were involved, appeared when repeating the evening prayer, she said: "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our dentists."

A queer way of procuring drink came up the other day in Waterbury, Conn. A man rushed hurriedly into a drug store, with a scratch on his hand, exclaiming: "For haven's sake give me a drink of whisky immediately. I've been bitten by a dog that acts mad, and I want protection against hydrophobia." He got the drink, but the drug clerk says the game won't work in that shop again.

Obituary.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. Allan, wife of Mr. Geo. Allan, Hunter street, one of the old and highly respected residents of Peterborough. Mrs. Allan was 58 years of age at the time of her death. Mr. Allan has the sympathy of the community in his great bereavement.

A Dry Drink.

Saturday, two well-known citizens, after transacting some business together, decided to reward themselves for their industry by indulging in the flowing bowl. They adjourned to the nearest drink depot only to find the dispenser of fluids out of the way. First a modest tap on the bar, and, then, when that produced no response, they pounded their knuckles bare in a vain attempt to "raise the spirits." Failing here, they sought the next bar-room, with a similar result. Their knuckles not being equal to another assault on the bar, they entered the dining room and rang the bell long and loud. This led to no result except disappointment, and the determination of the pair to abstain—when they couldn't help it. They now both wonder whether hotel men are thus gradually weaning themselves, in view of the sudden stoppage of spirituous supplies next May.

Norwood Exhibition.

The seventeenth exhibition of the East Riding of Peterborough Agricultural Society will take place at Norwood on Tuesday and Wednesday next, Oct. 13th and 14th. This will be no exception to the rule of good exhibitions held under the management of this society, and there will doubtless be a large attendance. It might be suggested to our merchants that it would be in their interest if they were to show more interest in what concerns the farmers, by attending their exhibitions. The merchants largely depend upon the patronage of the farmers, and it would pay the former to cultivate more friendly relations. Port Hope merchants visit the fairs held in the vicinity of that town, but a Peterborough merchant is never seen at a country fair, and a fair at home does not take out one in ten of them. Let the merchants come to THE EXAMINER office and get some beautiful cards or circulars printed, to distribute personally amongst the farmers, accompanied with a hand-shake and an inquiry after the crops and the old woman, or the young woman, as the case may be.

Magnificent Music.

The Telgmann Sextette Club, with Miss Maggie Barr, the Queen of Scottish song, and Miss McGarry, as elocutionist, will appear in Bradburn's Opera House on Tuesday evening, Oct. 13th. The unrivalled sextette club is composed of four brothers and two sisters. This club has scored brilliant successes wherever they have appeared. Miss Barr, as an exponent of Scottish song, has no superior and perhaps not an equal, while the intense realism of Miss McGarry's readings combined make the entertainments of this organization of the highest order. The press speaks very highly of them. The St. Thomas Journal says of Miss Maggie Barr:—"The sweetest singer of the auld Scotch sang in Canada." Miss McGarry is thus referred to by the Montreal Herald:—"The dramatic reading by Miss McGarry at the William Molson Hall was touchingly and faithfully rendered. Her elocution was faultless." The Brockville Recorder says:—"This talented company has legitimately won for itself unqualified commendation for their fine and enjoyable concerts. The very name of the talented Telgmann family will have the magical effect of drawing overflowing houses wherever they appear."

The Riel Appeal.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—It is probable that Louis Riel may be granted a further respite, his counsels here having made application to the Privy Council to adjourn the hearing of the appeal until Mr. Fitzpatrick, Riel's Canadian counsel, arrives. If the application is entertained, a second respite will be necessary, to give the Privy Council time to examine all the evidence forthcoming.

England and the Porte.

Satisfactory Settlement of the Egyptian Question.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 10.—Sir Henry Drummond Wolff's mission has been crowned with success. His understanding with the Porte on Egyptian affairs is complete and an imperial irade will shortly be issued sanctioning a arrangement, the principal points of which are as follows: Turkey appoint six commissioners, two for finance, two for military organization and two for general administration. England, on her side will appoint a similar number. When the labors of these men have been completed and Egyptian affairs have been placed on a satisfactory footing, British occupation will cease.

THE BARNARDO HOMES AND THEIR WORK.

The following article appears in the Globe of Saturday:—"The Globe's position respecting the acceptability of children sent out to Canada by charitable or other agencies in Great Britain has all along been quite unmistakable. Its contention throughout has been that there could be no objection to the immigration from Great Britain of young children of both sexes, provided that guarantees sufficient were afforded that the new comers had received proper preliminary training, and were sent out under circumstances which entitled them to confidence; but that on the other hand anything like a wholesale shovelling of the gutter children of Great Britain into the Dominion was very strongly to be deprecated and carefully guarded against.

The question, then, with regard to the different philanthropic and other agencies on the British side of the Atlantic which have engaged in this work of the deportation of children, depends altogether upon the conditions under which each of these societies conducts its work, its motives and its aims. There is, we believe, too much reason to think that in many cases not sufficient care is taken, and that many young immigrants of a very undesirable class are sent out to America.

In this article the Globe proposes to speak of that whereof it knows. A member of the staff of this paper on a recent visit to the Old Country took special trouble to inspect the Barnardo Homes for Destitute Children, and to go into the whole subject thoroughly. He visited not only the industrial institutions in the east of London, but also the village home for girls at Ilford, in the county of Essex. He went prejudiced against rather than friendly to them. He found that the boys in the industrial institutions received a thorough training for two, three, or more years, as the case might be. They are subjected to disciplinary training. They are trained in industry, trained in handiness of hand and quickness of eye. They are given the rudiments of secular education, and are constantly kept under religious and moral influences. These children are by no means only the vicious poor. The east of London has vast juvenile populations belonging to the industrial poor, quite as free from vicious taint as are their more wealthy neighbours. It was a very interesting sight to see these boys industriously engaged, some in making brushes, some in making boots, some making and some mending harness, and others at kindred occupations calculated to make the pupils of great value in any farmer's home. In fact in many instances in Canada, boys from the Homes have been found able to do the shoemaking and harness-mending required in the households in which they live. The boys are given promotion from the position of private to that of corporal and sergeant, with stripes on their arms as marks of good conduct, and in every way the influence of the industrial training schools seems to be of the highest kind, both from an industrial and moral point of view. Of these boys the pick only are sent out to Canada, and they are not sent until they have received the training of which we speak.

Then as to the village homes for girls, situated in a beautiful section of country, the idea is to reproduce somewhat as to plainness, yet comfort, the conditions which these young girls will encounter when they come to the rural districts of Canada, or Australia as the case may be. Throughout, the surroundings and conditions are of the highest character as to healthfulness, both physical and moral, and, among other advantages, these little girls have the close and loving supervision of many ladies of the highest social standing in Great Britain, who devote themselves to this work of love and self-denial purely from the highest considerations. There the little girls are imbued with moral and religious ideas and trained in habits of neatness, self-help, cleanliness, and of usefulness in the way of washing ironing, mending, etc. Of these, too, after they have received several years' preliminary training and watchful care, the select are transplanted to the Colonies, and particularly to Canada. Arriving here they proceed at once to the receiving home in Canada, which is situated in the neighborhood of Peterborough, Ont. A recent visit there shows that the watchfulness and care exercised on the other side of the Atlantic are equally extended on this side. The institution at Peterborough is charmingly situated in the midst of salubrious air and pleasant surroundings. The Home is a pattern of cleanliness and neatness. The children divide their time between working, playing, singing, and the schoolroom, but are constantly under kindly supervision until they obtain homes elsewhere. They do not ordinarily stay long in the Home at Peterborough, because the demand for these children in Canada is very great—the demand, indeed, being far ahead of the supply. These children, whether adopted, or merely allowed to be hired, chiefly in the families of farmers, are never lost sight of. They are visited at their place of abode twice a year, and no matter to what part of the world these young immigrants may go, through inspection, by letters and otherwise, their welfare is kept constantly in view for years and years after they have left the parental institution. The children have turned out exceedingly well, on the average, it is believed, as well as those children who have had far greater advantages in the way of early surroundings. Indeed, in these days of neglect of parental authority it would be a matter very much to be desired that every child in Canada had two or three years of the steady disciplinary training which is received by all the youthful immigrants that come from the Barnardo Homes.

Nor should this fact be lost sight of, that these institutions, valuable and far-reaching in their beneficial results as they are, do not use one penny of the public money. All expenses are met by purely voluntary contributions; and as far as the Canada home is concerned, Canadian destitute children are not excluded.

While maintaining therefore, our position that there is reason to accuse some of the institutions of shipping undesirable children hither, we cannot but believe that in the case of the children sent out from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, the sending of them is not only a blessing for the children, and an advantage to Great Britain, but also a great advantage to Canada, for undoubtedly what we need in Canada is more labor applied directly and indirectly to purposes of production from the soil. Not only is a wise system of child immigration useful to Canada, but the heart cannot but be enkindled at the thought of the improved opportunity that many of these destitute children, whose only crime is being born of poverty-stricken parents, have of growing up to be useful and possibly honoured citizens of the country of their adoption.

It is only just to say in connection with the Peterborough Home that it owes very much indeed to the large-heartedness and Christian philanthropy of Mr. Geo. A. Cox, the Mayor of Peterborough, and not less to Mrs. Cox, his estimable wife. Those who know anything of Peterborough will readily acknowledge that this is likely to be the case, for if the town of Peterborough itself is to-day one of the brightest, most attractive, and most city-like places of its population in Canada, no one in Peterborough, no matter what differences of opinion there may be on other subjects, will deny that towards such a result Geo. A. Cox has done his full share.

History of "Colonel T."

Peterborough Generosity.

The Cobourg World has the following in reference to "Col. T," the stallion which died the day after the Central Exhibition, in one of the races of which he entered with "Tariff":

"Colonel T." was purchased by Messrs. Appleby last July from Colonel B. Turner, of Pinevale, New York, and was of the "Hamil-[illegible] strain. His cost, including price of shipment to Cobourg, the sum of $990. He has only entered in two races, one a three mile contest at Elmira, N. Y., which he won, and the other in the Peterborough Driving Park on Wednesday, Sept. 30th.—He has trotted a mile in 2.32 and leaves several colts that can do it in under 2.40—His step brother has a record of 2:22. His death is not only a serious financial loss to Messrs. Appleby, but is a lamentable one to the horse breeders of this county. Good "Hamiltonian" stock is very scarce, and as it is always held at high prices, seldom does such a fine specimen as "Colonel T," reach a Canadian stable.

Since writing the above, free receipts in full, without any compensation whatsoever, for board, horse keeping, medicine, and services, amounting to over one hundred dollars, have been shown to us, written above the signatures of Wm. Snowden, proprietor of the Phalen House, and E. C. Crevier, V. S., both of Peterborough. These exceedingly generous donations, prompted by sincere sympathy, were as thankfully received as they were unexpected; and together with the numerous letters of condolence, and kindly expressions of regret, naturally kindle in the appreciative bosoms of Messrs. Appleby and Brother the very keenest sense of lasting gratitude toward their many acquaintances, who thus all have, "in time of need," proved themselves "friends, indeed."

"Well, it's kinder dubious," was the reply.

"How?"

"Why, I fell short of my estimate of stock by about $3,000."

"And you don't know how to make your figures come out even?"

"I confess I don't."

"Well, all you have to do is to mark everything up 20 per cent."

THE POTATO CROP.

We very much regret to learn that the outlook for the potato crop is far from encouraging. Reports from many sections of the Province are very unfavorable and a poor yield is naturally expected where returns are still wanting.

In Wellington County, and in Peel, the damage by rot is very great. Lincoln farmers declare half at least of the yield is unsaleable from the same cause. The reports from Wentworth and Welland Counties are equally discouraging. We have heard several farmers in our own county state that the crop is very poor and many declare whole fields are in some places completely destroyed.

The season has been most unfavorable, the cool, moist weather and excessive rains have been detrimental to the crop, even where no rot has set in, so that we may expect rates to be much higher than ordinary. Our people, as a rule, do not look upon potatoes as a paying crop at any time, and in consequence the acreage is always rather small. In other countries it is just the reverse. This will have a tendancy to increase the price of this succulent and useful root with us, and farmers in Ontario who have a good crop may expect a handsome yield.

The enemies of the potato crop are very numerous. Above ground it has hosts of enemies, like the Colorado pest, that testify to its goodness by their eagerness to devour it. Below ground it has also legions of insect foes and fungi, all more or less of a poisonous and destructive nature.

One of these is Peziza postuma, a fungus that after burrowing in the vitals of the tuber with the usual results, attains complete development in a proper fungoid form with a tiny toadstool top, borne on a slender stem. In this stage, these fungi are prepared to shed millions of spores to start a fresh community for the destruction of another lot of potatoes.

Another potatoe pest is Fusiporium solani, which comes out like sabres, on slender shafts, every separate sabre being thoroughly capable of diffusing sufficient spores to injure bushels of potatoes

The smut fungus called Tubercinia scabies is of an olive-green or brownish color and grows beneath the back of the tuber, where it forms a thin greenish-brown stratum. This may be well settled in the crop and yet show no sign to the casual eye of its existence. However, in the course of the winter it becomes active and the skin of the tuber is quickly discolored. Then the starch cells are invaded and the destruction of the whole crop is the result.

But the greatest plague of the potato is the notorious Peronospora infestans, a fungus scarcely less partial to the tomato and petunia, than the noble tuber which many besides Irishmen, cherish greatly for their daily food. This minute organism is one of the most wonderful products of creation.

It has so many changes of form, so much persistency, and is so thoroughly alive to the work of destruction, that were it not a destroyer of food, it would be worthy of praise in verse. It can work, but better than this, it can patiently wait. Years of watching have been bestowed upon it, and yet science knows little of its history. It can puzzle the chemist, the botanist and the miscroscopist, however skilfully they may arm themselves. It is as hard to know as the cholera microbe and bacilli. It puts proteus out of view by its changeableness, and laughs to scorn the spirit by its stolid fixity. It is the same ever, deadly in purpose and contant to all its inevitable metamorphoses. Perhaps when we know a little more of this wonderful organism, we shall be enabled to protect the useful and valuable tuber on which it preys, from its destructive ravages. We have little doubt that it is owing to the presence of this notorious pest, the potato crop at the present moment is reported as being so much below the general average.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The death of Cardinal McClosky, which took place at New York on October 10th, makes him the first of the American princes of the church to pass over to the majority. His funeral will probably take place a week from next Sunday.

Mr. Parnell will be regarded by the N. P. journals in Canada as the embodiment of patriotism :—"I claim for Ireland sufficient legislative independence to be allowed to protect Irish industries." They will sympathise with his efforts, and if their success imperils British connection, "so much the worse," as the Mail remarked in a treasonable moment —"so much the worse for British connection."

The Port Hope Times, an enthusiastic N. P. paper, in an article on the price of coal, quotes the price in Oswego, U. S., and states that in addition to this, Port Hope consumers have to pay the additional aggregate of "freight duty and harbor dues." The Tory papers have all along contended that the consumer does not pay the duty, but the Times proves they are wrong. Every ton of stove coal costs the consumer 50 cents, and every ton of soft coal 60 cents additional, on account of the duty. This does not make it much easier for the man who earns his money by hard knocks and has all he can do to make ends meet, without paying sixty cents on every ton of coal for no other purpose than to raise a revenue to be squandered by an extravagant administration. In 1384 Ontario imported for home consumption 690,940 tons of coal, on which was paid $414,571 in duties; that is, the people of this province had to pay for their coal nearly half a million more than would have been done had the duty not been imposed. Persons who voted for the N. P., and still grumble at the price of coal, are figuratively performing the impossible physical feat of kicking themselves.

Sentenced to Death.

The Murderers of Payne and Fremont Doomed to Death.

BATTLEFORD, N. W. W. T., Oct. 10.—The trial of the Indians charged with the murder of Payne and Fremont is concluded. Judge Rouleau sentenced them to be hanged on the 27th November. Three councillors who signed the celebrated Poundmaker letter, were sentenced to two years in penitentiary. The murder of Dill was placed on today.

The Hudson Bay Railway.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 10.—It has been definitely decided that a party of engineers will leave early next week to go over the proposed route of the Hudson Bay road, and make estimates of the cost. They will go by boat and return by dog train. The intention is that if the capital is provided, as proposed, on certain conditions, to first build from the head of Lake Winnipeg to Hudson Bay. English dealers here have given certain prices at which rails for the road will be laid down to the Hudson Bay terminus.

HATTIE'S HATRED.

"I never look ridiculous," cried Hattie Hall, "but some one appears to whom I'm particularly anxious to look my best. There I was—sleeves rolled up to my elbows, hair in anything but graceful disorder, washing the parlor windows, and singing as loudly as my lungs would admit, when who should walk in, 'sans ceremonie,' but Frank Wright. I haven't seen him in four years, not since I was 14, and he was just disagreeable enough to compliment me on my improved looks, glance maliciously at my rumpled locks and wet gown, while I stood looking just about as large as your little finger. Don't I hate him?"

"Undoubtedly you do," I replied, leisurely taking off my gloves. "Mr. Wright called at our house a short time ago—he mentioned being here."

"Mentioned being here!" Hattie repeated. "Did he give you a graphic description of my appearance? What did he say?"

"I have no idea of ministering to your vanity, my dear," I replied; "but I really regret that you are ashamed of having been surprised in useful employment. Why, I fancied you rather proud of your housekeeping qualities."

"Housekeeping qualities, indeed!" exclaimed Hattie in a vexed tone. "A good housekeeper never neglects her own person."

"But, Hattie," I urged, "one cannot expect to find one's friends en grande toilette while engaged in washing windows."

"But my hair was in such shameful disorder."

"You are looking your very best now, Hattie," I remarked, "whatever your forenoon appearance may have been."

"Oh, yes!" she replied. "As Uncle John says—after the horse was stolen I locked the barn!"

"Well," said I, "play me something by way of forgetting your unfortunate rencontre."

Hattie played exquisitively. She was just dashing off one of my favorites when Frank Wright came in. Hattie nodded, and demanded petulantly whether he was as charmed with her playing as he had been with her singing.

"More so," Mr. Wright had the candor to reply.

"Ah! then I dare say you do not consider me the sweetest singer in the world?" she questioned.

Mr. Wright was positive, on reflection, that he had listened to as good vocal efforts as he had heard that morning. After lingering as long as propriety would admit of, Frank withdrew.

"What a conceited puppy!" Hattie exclaimed as soon as he had gone.

"How ungenerous you are," said I; "you know you are thinking now, away down in your heart, how much tact and cleverness he displayed in warding off the shafts of your ridicule without turning the points against yourself. Besides, he is considered by wiser heads than ours a young lawyer of great promise. I heard father say yesterday that he never listened to a more able and touching appeal than his plea in the Austin and Wilkins suit; and he gained the cause, too. So the widow and orphans are not shelterless!"

"That was nothing," Hattie maintained. "If he had been employed on the other side it would have been the same thing."

"But he refused a retaining fee on the other side, and volunteered his services to the poor widow."

But Hattie would not believe it. Frank had been so unfortunate as to surprise her in questionable dishabille, and she could not forgive. "She never did like him when she was a little girl," she said. He was infinitely more disagreeable now."

"Then why were you so particularly anxious to appear your best before him!"

"Oh! he mentioned me in his letters to Ellen, and Ellen had writen back all sorts of nonsense about what she called my beauty. Do you think I wished to be canvassed by a pair of malicious eyes, and read in their ill-concealed expression: 'This is not quite the Hattie that I expected to see?' Not I."

Time passed. Ellen Wright and Hattie Hall were friends.

Frank's equanimity was never disturbed by Hattie's pretty sparring; indeed, he seemed rather to enjoy it. This only incensed her the more. "It was," she said, "as if she were not worth minding."

"Hattie," said I, as she sauntered into my sitting-room one day, with her apron full of flowers, and her hat swinging by one ribbon over her shoulder, "Frank Wright must be contemplating matrimony. Husband says the new house in progress at the other end of the street is his. I wonder who the bride-elect can be? Clara Perkins, do you suppose?"

"I am sure I do not know," she replied. "Of one thing I am positive, however; I shall not envy his wife neither her new house nor her husband. You know that I can't bear Frank Wright."

I had been telegraphing ever since she commenced, but she either could not or would not understand my signs, nor did she manifest any embarrassment when on turning around she saw the object of her spleen standing in the open door, a very perceptible smile wreathing his features.

"You have learned nothing new, I presume, Mr. Wright," she said. "But there is a certain adage about eavesdroppers that I would recommend to your leisure. Besides when you enter a room where people are talking about what you ought not to hear, please cough, clear your throat, or give other indications of your august presence."

And she saucily tossed her head."

"My dear Miss Hall," said Frank, advancing toward her, "I shall certainly strive to profit by your counsel; neither shall I regret having heard your expressed dislike of myself, since I trust it may teach me how I may render myself less repulsive, to you. For, believe me," he added, in tones intended for her ear only, "I cannot tell you how much I regret this singular abhorrence you have ever manifested. Can you not, point out some method by which I may yet hope to stand better in your regard?"

I did not hear the reply as I was summoned to the kitchen at that moment. But I have just foundations for believing that she did point out a way by which her esteem might be won; for not long ago I saw her and Frank standing in close proximity, while a venerable looking man propounded certain momentous questions which Frank answered frankly and distinctly, and Hattie's replies, though low, were quite satisfactory.

JESSIE'S PARLOR.

An orchard, the branches heavy with golden apples, here and there a ruddy "windfall," half-hidden in the long grass, and at the foot of one of the most richly-laden trees a young girl, half-asleep, with an ill-used book flung carelessly down, and indolent white arms thrown above her pretty dark head.

"Jessie!"

She made a sleepy little movement, indicative of annoyance at being interrupted in the middle of her siesta.

"Jessie, I say!"

Miss Jessie rose slowly and picked up her book. She was a tall, slight girl, of about eighteen years of age, with a rather pale face, and grey eyes, fringed with long black lashes. These eyes were her greatest charm. A little white gate divided the orchard from the garden, and Jessie passed through it with exasperating slowness.

"Was there ever such a girl!" thought her sister, her elder by twenty years, at least—the daughter of her father's first wife.

Caroline had loved her young stepmother, and when she died had tried to take a mother's place to the tiny, dark-eyed baby she left behind; but Jessie had proved a very troublesome charge.

"Well," said Jessie, interrogatively, looking at Caroline standing in the doorway, with her sleeves tucked up, and her stout arms covered with flour. "What is it, Caroline?"

"Come and move your rubbish out of the front room."

"What for?" asked Jessie, in undisguised astonishment.

"Because father's going to let it to a young fellow from London."

Jessie looked indignant. Her parlor, with the piano in it, to be let to some horrid man, and all her pretty belongings to be banished to her little bedroom. Oh! it was too bad.

"Carrie," she said, "how could you advise father to do such a thing? I never thought we should have to take in lodgers; I'd rather run away."

"Where to?" asked the rather matter-of-fact Caroline.

Jessie bit her lips, and went indoors to remove her books and needlework from the little parlor that had been regarded as her especial sanctum ever since she had entered her teens. It never occurred to Miss Jessie that money was rather scarce with her father just now, and that the lodger would bring grist to the mill. She regarded the whole thing as a conspiracy to make her uncomfortable.

They might have consulted her, she thought, forgetting that she never troubled herself in any way with the affairs of the household. How she wished she could have had her piano carried upstairs; but that was impossible. It was the chief ornament of the room, and her father, she knew, would not allow her to take it away.

"I shall hate him; I know I shall," she told herself, thinking of the lodger.

And for the first two or three days she kept carefully out of his way, and Mr. Leith remained unconscious of the fact that he was under the same roof with a pretty girl. But he made the discovery one afternoon. When wandering through the orchard, with his hands behind his back, he came suddenly upon a slight, girlish figure, in brown holland, a wide hat shading her eyes from the sun. Wonderful eyes they were—so large and dark, and utterly bewitching. She was gone like a flash; but her image lingered in Mr. Leith's memory. He was not a very talkative man; but he began to cultivate Caroline Maybrick's acquaintance, and soon found that the girl in the brown holland dress was her sister. He grew so friendly that Caroline ventured to ask him to take tea with them in the kitchen one afternoon. The farmer was quite willing; but Jessie objected most strongly, and threatened not to come in to tea at all.

"Besides," she said, "what does a gentleman want in a farmhouse kitchen?"

However, Mr. Leith seemed very much at home there, and delighted Caroline and her father by his bright flashes of wit. He did his best to please that afternoon; but was it only for the benefit of the farmer and his elder daughter, or did his eyes wander in the direction of Jessie's slim figure? He could not understand why it was that the girl always avoided him. If she had wished to arouse his interest she could not have devised a better way. Her reserve piqued his curiosity, and he found her pretty face coming between him and the fusty old pages of his books.

Once he went for a long walk, and returning home in the twilight, heard her at the piano, and paused to listen; but she caught sight of his figure outside the window, and the music ceased in an instant. When he entered the room he found it empty; but a little bow of ribbon lay on the carpet. Mr. Leith whistled, walked to the door, closed it carefully, and then picked up the ribbon bow with a shamefaced look, and actually kissed it. Then, with fingers that trembled in a most unaccountable way, he placed it in his pocket-book.

"Your sister is shy," he observed to Caroline, later on.

"It isn't that," responded Caroline, with a laugh; "but she hasn't got over being turned out of her room. It was hers, you know, before you came, and she hated the idea of father taking a lodger."

"Oh," said Mr. Leith, considerably enlightened, and next evening, as Jessie was eating an apple in the orchard, the enemy bore down on her before she could beat a retreat. "Miss Jessie," he said, taking off his hat, "you must not run away. I want to speak to you."

"What is it?" asked Jessie, coldly, throwing her apple over the hedge.

She had no longer any appetite for it.

"I want to apologise for having unconsciously taken possession of your little parlor. It makes me feel like an interloper."

"Who told you it was my parlor?" asked Jessie, trying to steel her heart against him; but thinking all the same, what a handsome man he was, with his blue eyes, and tawny beard.

"Never mind who told me," said Gerald Leith, with a smile. "I know I have unconsciously deprived you of your piano ever since I have been here, and I want you to forgive me."

"It is I who ought to ask your forgiveness, Mr. Leith. I have often stolen in to have an hour with my piano, when you have been out."

She smiled and colored as she spoke, unable to resist the winning sweetness of his voice and manner.

They stood watching the moon above the tree tops, talking pleasantly, until Caroline came to the door, and called her sister.

"Where on earth have you been, Jessie?" she asked.

"Talking to Mr. Leith," returned Jessie, as she followed her into the room.

"Wonders will never cease," exclaimed Caroline. "I thought you hated him; but there, I think he would talk any one over with that pleasant voice of his."

Jessie thought so too; but she did not give vent to her opinion in words. She was looking unusually well; a color became her, but it was not the rose flush upon her cheeks, that made her look so lovely. There was a change in her tonight, and her sister was vaguely conscious of it, as the girl stood looking down into the glowing fire in the kitchen grate.

"Our Jessie is growing a regular beauty," observed Caroline to her father, when her sister had gone up to bed.

"Handsome is as handsome does," returned Mr. Maybrick, puffing away at his pipe. Jessie's education had cost him no end of money, while the more homely Caroline had put pounds in his pocket.

But Mr. Maybrick had no eye for beauty. He was not like his lodger, who could get very little sleep for thinking of a pair of bright eyes and a slim girlish figure.

Next morning, as Mr. Leith sat at breakfast, he caught sight of Jessie talking to a stoutly-built, curly-headed young fellow; and his heart gave a jealous throb.

Who was that rustic she seemed so interested in? He could not be her sweetheart—surely a girl like Jessie would not throw herself away on such an awkward lub.

Mr. Leith tried to read his newspaper, and forgot the happy-looking couple in the garden; but it was of no use.

There they were, parading up and down in full view of his window, and now and then their voices were wafted to him on the breeze.

He felt he could stand it no longer, and slammed down the window in a rage. What was the use of coming to the country for quiet, if people would persist in making such a racket?

He took his hat, and went for a walk, and when he returned home, had the pleasure of seeing that rustic, through the kitchen window, dining with the family.

Mr. Leith closed the door of his room; but he could not shut out the sound of that fellow's noisy laughter.

"If he is a frequent guest, my stay here will not be of very long duration," he thought.

Presently, to his intense annoyance, he saw Jessie and the stranger out in the garden again, and after his own dinner had been served, he heard Miss Caroline calling them in to tea; and found that the young man's name was Bob—detestable name! Mr. Leith had never felt more miserable than he did that evening, and his life had not been devoid of trouble.

Mr. Leith was sitting in the dark, and presently heard voices outside the door.

"I am sure he is out, child," said Caroline. "The lamp is not lit; you can go in and play for a little while, and Mr. Leith will never be a bit the wiser."

He did not hear Jessie answer—her voice was not so loud; but the door opened, and she came into the room going straight over to the piano.

Mr. Leith held his breath, lying back in the arm-chair, while Jessie played softly in the darkness.

He could see the dim outline of her form, as she sat at the piano; for what little light there was fell full upon her. He was angry with her—most unreasonably angry, but he could not lose the chance of speaking to her alone.

"Miss Jessie," he said quietly.

Jessie gave a faint scream. He had frightened her so much, that she trembled like a leaf. She was going to run out of the room, when his voice arrested her movement.

"I shall be sorry that I revealed myself, if you are going to run away," he went on. "It is not often I have the chance of hearing you playing, Miss Jessie."

Jessie sat down at the piano, but she did not play. Her little brown hands were trembling too much. Mr. Leith rose, and stood by her side.

"I shall be going back to London, soon," he said, "and it will be pleasant to think of these few moments spent with you at the piano."

"You are going away soon," faltered Jessie, and something in her voice made George Leith's heart beat more quickly.

"I saw you with that young fellow to-day," he said abruptly. "You seemed very happy."

"Bob and I are always like that," observed Jessie, her eyes beginning to sparkle, and a little smile quivering on her sweet lips. But George Leith could not see these signs of merriment.

"I hope you always will be," he said. "May I wish you every happiness?"

"You may if you like," said Jessie with an odd little break in her voice, for she was trying hard to smother her laughter.

"When is it to be?" asked Mr. Leith trying to speak lightly, but not succeeding very well.

"When is what to be?" asked Jessie with a little gasp.

"Your marriage, of course," returned Mr. Leith rather coldly, for he knew now that she was laughing at him.

"I think you are putting the cart before the horse," observed Jessie demurely.

"What do you mean?" he asked impatiently.

"I mean," said Jessie, suddenly growing dignified, "that I have no lover, so it is rather premature to talk of my marriage."

"Then that young man?"—began Mr. Leith.

"Is the affianced husband of my dearest friend." As she uttered these words Jessie rose from the piano to find herself clasped in the arms of her father's lodger.

"And to think," said Miss Maybrick afterwards, "that you should make all that fuss about Mr. Leith coming, and then marry him, after all! I was never so surprised in my life!"

"It is the best thing that could have happened to her," observed her father. "She never would have been worth anything as a farmer's wife;" and indeed this is true, but Jessie never wanted to be a farmer's wife, and is quite content with the destiny that has made her Mrs. George Leith.

A pretty Boston schoolma'am and a youth of mien sedate, Were parting in the evening beside the garden gate; His hand and heart he'd offered her in a grave and sober way, And she, with quiet dignity, had named the happy day; He lingered at the gate with her, and said in accents low: "There is a little favor I would ask before I go; A favor never asked before; sweet maiden, it is this—A lover's privilege, that is all—a sweet betrothal kiss." "If you'll wait," the maiden whispered, with her color rising high, "Till I remove my spectacles, I'll willingly comply."—Somerville Journal.

A Good Thing.

The new and popular Canadian Pacific Railway are going to run a personally conducted excursion to the Pacific coast on the 21st Oct. There are only a limited number of berths, so that immediate application should be made. All information as to routes, time, fares, etc., will be cheerfully supplied by Alex. Elliott, the reliable local ticket agent of the C. P. R.

The Reward of Honesty.

A young gentleman of sporting proclivities, who makes his head quarters at a leading hotel, accompanied a well known business man into a certain bank on Water street on Saturday morning, and while the latter was transacting his business, amused himself at the desk by writing out a check for $300, signing to it his name, which, though it might be worth something at a faro bank, is not recognized as that of the holder of an account in the bank on Water street. His friend having completed his financing, the sport left with him, leaving the cheque he had written lying on the desk. Two minutes later a red-faced granger came in to make up his deposit slip, and seeing the cheque at once thought he had struck oil. Breathlessly he flew to the manager with it, and that gentleman taking in the position at a glance determined to have some fun. "Oh, yes," said he, "he's good for it, worth any amount, but a deuced reckless fellow, you'd better hunt him up and get the reward." The granger ascertained the hotel at which the sport was staying, and went off after him helter-skelter, with visions of a handsome reward for his honesty floating through his excited brain. On arriving at the hotel he sought out the clerk and, inquiring for Mr. ———, showed the cheque and told the story. Mr. ——— was out just then, the clerk said; he had better sit down and wait. The granger carefully ensconsed himself in a chair near the door, and was soon telling the occupant of the chair nearest him of his find and who he was looking for. In the meantime the sporting gentleman, who was actually in the room at the time, had been told of the matter by the clerk, and, tumbling to the joke, sat down beside the farmer and began to draw him out. The latter, nothing loth, soon began to tell his story, and was told if he would go to a certain place he would find Mr. ———, the owner of the cheque. Away he went, and on arriving at the given place was informed that the gentleman he was looking for had just gone to the Grand Central; at the Grand Central he was informed that Mr. ——— was just gone to the Oriental; from the Oriental he was sent in search of him to the Court House, and so from pillar to post the unfortunate granger was sent looking for the owner of a cheque not worth the paper it was written on. He would probably have remained in town all night had he been alone, but his better half, who thought her good man must be gone crazy, lugged him off about 6 o'clock. He still clung to the cheque, however, and the boys are anxiously expecting to see him in town again today.

The Assizes.

Crown v. Tanner—The Majesty of the Law Vindicated.

FOURTH DAY.

The case of Prenevean vs. McCann, an action for damages on account of false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, lasted till late on Saturday evening. After recess the Crown vs. Tanner, a criminal action against G. Tanner for assaulting Judge Dennistoun at Lakefield, was taken up. Tanner entered a plea of guilty and was fined $100 with two months imprisonment. The verdict of the jury in Prenevean vs. McCann was delivered this morning. Plaintiff gets $225 damages and defendant pays costs. The case of Hilliard vs. Gemmell is now in progress.

Children's Matinee.

The children will have a special opportunity of hearing Maggie Barr, Miss McGarry and the Telgmann Sextette Club. A matinee will be given in the Opera House, on Tuesday afternoon, at 4:15 o'clock. The price of admission has been placed within the reach of all. Children 10cts, adults 25c. The programme will be specially adapted for schools.

A Bit of Batoche.

A real live Gatling gun, the exact counterpart of the broadcast sower of slaughter that was operated by "Lieut." Howard, "U.S.A.," at Batoche, arrived in town this morning. The gun is in charge of Capt. Casey, of Colbourne, of the Prince of Wales Dragoon Guards, and Sergeant Strong, of the same corps. The Gatling will be in Peterborough till Tuesday evening, when it will be taken to Norwood exhibition. Persons in Peterborough will find out by means of posters where it may be seen in town and on what terms.

Annual Hunting Expedition.

This morning an annual hunting party composed of Messrs. J. J. Lunday, Geo. B. Sproule, A. Morey, Wm. English, Harry Winch, R. A. Morrow, started for the north on a fortnight's camping and hunting expedition. They go thoroughly equipped for shooting anything from a deer to a duck; from an eagle to a snipe. The party drives to the rendezvous, which is in the vicinity of Eagle and Gold Lakes. The members of this party have made their annual hunting expedition regularly for the past twenty years. The only members of the old original party not out on this campaign are Messrs. James English town, and "Willie" Hall, Buckhorn.

Fire.

About noon to-day smoke was noticed issuing from the roof of the Review building, but for some time no notice was taken of it, it being thought that it came from some of the chimneys near the back of the building. At length, however, it became so thick and dense that an alarm was raised and in the meantime the smoke had made its way into the upper flat of the building, used as a bindery and storeroom for paper stock. The firemen were promptly on hand, and carrying up two lines of hose to the roof soon had the fire under control, but considerable damage was done to the stock in the upper flat by the amount of water that was turned on. The water pressure was good. The origin of the fire can only be conjectured, but seems to have been from a chimney running up. The roof is double, a shingle roof built over a flat one and the fire seems to have started in the shingling.

The English Campaign.

Cardinal Manning's Advice to the Catholic Electorate.

DUBLIN, Oct. 10.—Cardinal Manning, in his article published in the Review on how Catholics should vote, defends Parliament and the constitution even though oppressing Catholicism. He praised the liberalism which is devoted to the care of the poor, change of the land laws and enforcement of local option. He strongly denounces secular education, and urges Catholics to place the religious question foremost and to support only those candidates who are in favor of placing voluntary schools upon equality with board schools—a vital question in Christian education—and of appointing a royal commission to examine the education question.

More Boulevarding.

Mr. John Cousins has greatly added to the beauty of Mr. R. B. McKee's fine residence premises, corner of Rubidge and Charlotte streets, by laying down on the both fronts a fine boulevard. This is to be continued on Rubidge street in the front of the residence of Mr. P. Simons, and as the fever is exceedingly infectious, it is not likely to stop till it reaches King street. It is difficult to see how the directors, so to speak, of the Charlotte street Methodist Church can avoid continuing the boulevard in front of the church premises.

The Assizes.

FOURTH DAY.

Hilliard v. Gemmel was taken up yesterday morning. The action was one instituted by plaintiff to recover from defendants an amount of money claimed to be due as rent of a building near the Blythe mills occupied by them. Plaintiff claimed that defendant had received notice to quit or or pay an increased annual rent, and that remaining on after the term had expired they became liable [illegible] remained on the premises for upwards of nine months after the expiration of the term. Defendant maintained that he was only entitled to pay rent at the old rate, hence the action. A verdict was returned for plaintiff, $80. Mr. D. W. Dumble appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. G. Edmison defended the suit.

Reynolds v. Roxburgh.

Reynolds v. Roxburgh was taken up after recess. The action was one taken to recover damages by plaintiff for the loss of a portable engine, alleged by him to have been hired for 100 days by defendants, Roxburgh, Ferguson and Rourke, of Norwood, which from neglect on the part of those attending to it, exploded, killing one of the attendants, and wrecking the engine. The plaintiff testified to having rented the engine to the defendant Ferguson for 100 days at $100. The engine was good and sound, and had the usual appliances, gauges, water taps, etc. He had visited the scene of the explosion, and from what he saw there, believed that the explosion had been occasioned by excessive pressure.

A. W. Dafoe, from whom the last witness purchased the engine, testified that he purchased it from the Joseph Hall Company, of Oshawa, paying $1,050 for it and a separator. The engine alone was worth $750. He was not an engineer, but believed that the engine was a good and sound one; he bought it for one of the Joseph Hall Coy's. make. He ran it for three years. It was in good order when handed over to plaintiff. It was run at a pressure of from 60 to 110 pounds. In cross examination he stated that while in his possession it had been rented to three different persons, he could not say how they used it, but he believed they took good care of it.

Charles Frocs, a miner, who had run the engine, gave evidence that he believed it to be a good sound engine.

William Foster, an engineer of Peterboro', who saw the wreck after the explosion, and examined the material of the boiler, gave it as his opinion that the iron was sound and good. He thought 70 or 80 pounds was the highest pressure such an engine should be run at.

W. A. Law, of the Central Iron Works, who visited the scene of the explosion with the last witness, held the same belief, and said the engine might have burst from three causes, overpressure, underpressure with the water low, or from lowness of water and excessive steam. He believed the explosion had been caused by excessive pressure.

Robert Small testified to having seen the engine run at 110 pounds pressure on the night preceeding the explosion, and said the ball on the safety valve was at the extreme end of the lever.

John Patterson gave testimony that William Black, who was in charge of the engine, and was killed when it exploded, was not an efficient engineer.

John MacMaster gave similar evidence.

Luke Cooper, who was assisting at the mill, said the engine was run at 120 pounds pressure on the night preceding the explosion. On the morning of the explosion they were firing up from 6.30 to 9.30 and could not get more than 60 or 70 pounds of steam on the morning of the explosion. There had been no trouble in getting up steam on the previous night.

W. H. Brethen and John Carter were also called in support of the action.

THE DEFENCE

set up was that the engine in question had not been hired by Roxburgh & Co. for themselves, but for two brothers, Edward and Joseph Forner, who were sawing lumber for defendants by the thousand.

It was further claimed that the boiler was improperly constructed and of inferior material and liable to explode under a legitimate pressure.

Mr. Roxburg testified that he had no direct dealings with the firm, he only supplying money while Ferguson and Rourke worked and all divided the profit equally.

Robert Ferguson said that he hired the engine from Reynolds for the Forner Bros., who were sawing lumber for defendants and other people by the thousand feet. He did not remember ever having admitted that defendants were liable for damage to the engine.

The defendant Rourke gave evidence to the same effect.

The principal witness in support of the insufficient construction and inferior material of the engine was Richard Reeves, foreman boiler maker in the shop of William Hamilton. He said that he had visited the scene of the explosion and made an examination of the engine to ascertain, if possible, the cause of the accident. He found that the iron of which the boiler was constructed was too thin and of a poor quality, and that the stay bolts had not been properly fastened. He believed the accident might have occurred with only 25 pounds of steam on. Witness was shown the piece of iron taken from the boiler, which had been pronounced good by Messrs. Law and Foster; he considered it poor quality of iron. He produced some pieces that he had taken from the boiler and tested and found that they were poor quality of iron.

The counsel for defence was addressing the court as we went to press.

Mr. D. W. Dumble represents the plaintiff, and Mr. G. Edmison the defendants in the suit.

Belleville.

On Saturday afternoon about 3 o'clock, two young lads named Johnnie Graham, aged 9 years, and Jimmy Herring, aged 5 years, attempted to cross the raceway below Cooper's flour mill to gather chips on the island in the river. There is a narrow board spanning the raceway upon which the boys attempted to cross. When about half way over, little Jimmy Harding [illegible] and fell into the water, pulling his companion with him. The mill was running at the time and a considerable volume of water was passing through the raceway, making a swift current. The Graham boy managed to make the shore and escaped. He says that the Herring boy was swept into an eddy a short distance from where he fell in. He saw him standing on his feet and heard him call out, "Johnnie, help me." The water was between them and the Graham boy ran to the end of the island over the stones. When he reached the furthest point he looked up but the little fellow was gone.—Intelligencer.

Rebellion Losses.

Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, one of the commissioners appointed to investigate the damages caused by the rebellion in the Northwest, has arrived in the city. He says he and his fellow-commissioner, Mr. Munns, of Woodstock, traversed every inch of the territory made famous by the campaign, and made a thorough investigation among settlers and others. He further says that the losses are not near so heavy as were reported. Those engaged in the rebellion on both sides are to have their claims investigated. Mr. Ouimet would not state whether or not the government would allow the half-breeds anything for the reported looting by the troops. He says that perfect tranquility prevails since the Metis got their land claims settled. The Government have supplied food to those who were in any danger of want caused by the troubles. Riel is still looked upon by the great majority of the half-breeds as their leader. They still believe in him.

A Religio-Political Sunday.

Archbishops, Bishops and Mr. Parnell Cause a Sensation at Kildare.

KILDARE, Oct. 12.—St. Bridget's Church, over which Dr. Kavanagh is to preside, was finally dedicated yesterday. Archbishops Croke and Walsh, Bishops Duggan and Lynch, Mr. Parnell and the heads of various religious orders were present. In replying to an address, on Saturday evening, Archbishop Walsh took the opportunity to denounce Dublin Castle, and to declare in favor of abolishing the Lord Lieutenancy. Archbishop Croke yesterday preached a semi-political sermon in the presence of the assembled bishops and priests. He urged the people to remain steadfast in their religion, but not to forget their duty to their country. The sermon moved deeply the large congregation which had assembled from a wide area. Mr. Parnell as a Protestant did not attend the service, but on its occasion was shown through the church. His presence gave rise to an extraordinary scene. Men and woman clambered on the seats to catch a view of the Irish leader, but though the excitement was great the people observed decorous silence. Mr. Parnell was then conducted to the convent, where lunch was served. The Irish leader sat between Archbishops Walsh and Croke. After lunch Mr. Parnell repaired to a platform erected outside the church to receive addresses from the local bodies. He replied in a speech of extraordinary vigor.

The "Sick Man's" Death Struggle.

A Gigantic Effort Being Made to Save Himself From Dissolution.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 12.—Turkish mobilization up to the present has brought under arms 180 battalions, averaging each 700 men. This makes a total force now available, 126,000 men. Four large Austrian Lloyd's steamers, besides four Turkish transports, are conveying troops from Smyrna and other ports in the vicinity, to Salonica and to Dededjatch on the Ægean, the southern terminus of the railway from Adrianople to Philippopolis. It has been decided to call out a portion of the second ban of redifs or landwehr. To meet the transport requirement two more large Austrian steamers were engaged on Saturday. The Turks are laying their plans with great skill. Two large armies are being formed, one at Adrianople, the other at Uskup, 112 miles northwest of Salonica. The first army mentioned is intended to advance into Eastern Roumelia, if the diplomatic efforts now going on fail to produce a peaceful arrangement, while the other corps being within easy striking distance of Sofia can threaten the Bulgarian capital while watching the Servians and Montenegrins. The Turkish position is, in fact, much improved. All danger from Albanian hostility is at an end for the present. Veisel Pasha, who commands the Turkish troops in that region, telegraphs he is not only able to spare a large body of men for the march upon Sofia, but that the Albanians offer a contingent for fighting the battles of the Sultan. The Sultan still hopes for a diplomatic settlement. There is reason to believe the present military measures are intended more to overawe the Balkan nationalties when the moment arrives for declaring the will of the great Powers than for actual hostilities. The Turkish military party, however, have got the bit between the teeth, and the Sultan may be hurried into war against his wishes in order to avoid exciting the Mussulman population. No troops are passing through Constantinople, those from the Sea of Marmora even being carried to Dededjatch by water. Ghazi Mouktar and Faud Pasha will be placed in command, but the appointments will be made only when war is inevitable. The Turkish troops are leaving the port of Ismid, on the Sea of Marmora, all well equipped and clad in new uniforms. Turkey is still, from a military point of view, very strong.

Attacked by Moonlighters.

They Pay Their Attentions to Lord Lansdowne.

DUBLIN, Oct. 12.—Aghadoe House, near Killarney, the residence of Mr. Samuel J. Heaney, agent for Lord Lansdowne, was attacked by moonlighters last night. A number of shots were fired, but no serious damage was done. The police force returned to guard the premises. No arrests were made.

TORONTO, Oct. 12.—It is reported here on good authority that George Olds, at present traffic manager of the Missouri Pacific Railway, has been offered and accepted the position of General traffic Manager of the Canadian Pacific system.

A Gigantic Explosion.

The explosion of Hallett's Reef in 1876 was a great step toward removing the dangers of navigation in the Hell Gate approach to New York. But that was a small event compared to the immense blast which on Saturday shivered Flood Rock to fragments. On the former occasion forty-eight thousand pounds of dynamite were used. The charge used at Flood Rock amounted to two hundred and eighty-three thousand pounds of dynamite and "rackarock"—one hundred and forty tons!

Free Schools in England.

The free school idea is taking firm hold of the public mind in England. The adoption of this system is but a question of time, and probably a very short time. It is curious and, to dwellers on this side of the Atlantic, wonderful, to see the objections that are raised and the quarters from which they come. Probably the strongest opposition, and that which will hold out the longest, is that of those who should be the warmest supporters of the movement, the friends of the Church schools. These rightly foresee in free schools the end of the system which enables them to teach the creed and the catechism of a sect under the patronage of the State and with the money of the whole people, many of whom do not subscribe to the creed or the catechism. But they wrongly conceive that the abolition of compulsory fees will be the death-blow to voluntaryism in education. There will always be ample room and a noble work for voluntary institutions.—Canada School Journal.

The Canadian Pacific.

The Opening of the Lake Superior Section Postponed.

The Canadian Pacific railway intended opening the Canadian all rail route by the north shore of Lake Superior to Winnipeg on the 18th October, but have decided not to do so in order that they may have the road completed and in perfect order before opening the passenger service. It will, however, be open for freight traffic on that date, and for passenger traffic on the 2nd November, the time intervening being taken up in completing the road in the minutest details for the comfort of travellers.

EAST DURHAM PROTESTED.

A protest has been entered against the election of Mr. H. A. Ward in East Durham. It is said that corrupt practices prevailed to such an extent that the election can be voided. It is understood that a determined effort will be made to punish certain non-residents who took a false oath of ownership of certain property, in which they had no beneficial interest.

UNITED STATEES CROPS.

The crop report of the United States department of agriculture gives a fairly good report of the general state of the crops in the neighboring republic. Cotton does not realize the promise of the earlier portion of the season, and the declination is estimated to be in the ratios of 78 to 87. The corn crop has met with very little injury from frost and will yield slightly above the average. Present indications point to a yield of 26½ bushels per acre throughout the country. The returns for wheat are on a basis of the yield per acre for the area harvested. The average is about 10½ bushels. It is only 9 bushels on the area sown which was nearly forty millions. The average yield of oats will be nearly 28 bushels per acre, insuring a crop in excess of six hundred million bushels. The rye average is 10 decimal 4 bushels, nearly two bushels short of the yield of 1884. The average yield of barley will be about 22 bushels per acre. The condition of potatoes has seriously declined on account of the prevalence of rot in New York, Michigan and elsewhere. The decline from September 1st was 14 points. Canadian dealers it will be seen, can have no hope of filling the deficiency in the home potato crop by importations from the States.

ALWAYS EQUAL TO THE OCCASION.

The administration of the Ontario Cabinet has for the past thirteen years been distinguished as being conducted in harmony with the demands of the public interest. A disposition has always been shown to grapple with public questions in a patriotic and practical manner. It has been long a subject of complaint that our common jails have been crowded with lunatics, who, it was justly held, were no fit occupants of a penal institution. The Ontario Government have had the subject under consideration, and have taken the earliest opportunity of dealing with it. They have made, and are making, provisions for the accomodation of over two hundred insane persons now confined in the county jails, and when preparations are completed we may expect a general jail delivery of lunatics. The building of additions to the asylums, which necessarily consumes some time, is in progress, and in addition, the unused buildings of Regiopolis College Kingston, have been secured for five years rent free, and it will require only an expenditure of $10,000 in repairs and alterations to fit them for the reception of lunatics. It has been urged by the journalistic opponents of the Mowat Administration, that the negotiations in connection with the transfer of these buildings to the custody of the government, have been conducted with a view to purchasing political support. A sufficient answer to such an absurd charge is the fact that the government securing the building rent free, secure all the benefit; and it does not correspond with the Tory idea, especially, of purchasing support to have all the advantage on the side of the alleged purchaser. An opportunity of assailing the Ontario Government on justifiable grounds is so infrequently presented that advantage is taken of the faintest semblance of a joint in their harness to make good an attack. But in this case the opposition organs have overreached themselves—their fault-finding has merely given the opportunity of showing that the Government in the matter complained of, have driven a good bargain in the interest of the Province.

The position of the local Government is further strengthened by the defence of their action, kindly furnished, by mistake of course, by a Tory journal. The Guelph Herald, innocently believing that the Dominion Government was moving in the matter, thus rushes to the defence of the transaction and unwillingly supports the course of the Ontario Government. The Herald says:

"The Dominion Government has secured the use of Regiopolis College, Kingston, from the Catholic Church, rent free for five years. The institution is to be used for additional accommodation in connection with Rockwood Asylum, and the Government is to spend $10,000 to fit it up for this purpose. Some Grit journals are squealing about the corrupt action of the Government in this transaction. The country derives all the benefits of any corruption there may be in the matter as the church receives nothing for giving over a handsome property for five years for the better accommodation of the unfortunate."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Saturday, November 7th, has been fixed upon by the Dominion Government, as Thanksgiving Day.

The whole of the revising barristers must be selected by the Dominion Government before the 20th of this month.

Mr. Fabre, chief agent of the Dominion, Paris, ventures the opinion:—"A popular immigration from France to Canada is neither desirable nor possible."

Sir Charles Tupper says:—"The demand for fat cattle in England is such that if they were carried free the Government would have to charter a fleet to carry the number that would be offered."

Mr. Powderly, in his address to the Knights of Labor, Hamilton, said:—"Workingmen must take some action looking to the prevention of immigration during periods of depression, such as we are now passing through."

The change in letter-postage in the United States from 3 cents per half ounce to 2 cents per whole ounce, is having a marked effect on the use of postal cards, which, owing to the low rate of letter-postage have been driven largely out of use, thus almost doubling the revenue to the department and benefitting the stationers.

The Mail asserts that the business which the Reformers met to transact in Bowmanville on Saturday was not important, the party being instructed to keep a sharp lookout for the voters. This may not be important to the Mail, whose party has the voters' lists looked after sharply by officials of the Dominion Government, whose salaries are paid by Reformer and Conservative alike. The revising barristers relieve the party of the trouble of even keeping up an organization.

Tory journals deny that the present Government protected the coal oil industry by increasing the duty on imported oil. The denial, says the Ottawa Free Press, is a mere quibble. The protection was afforded by a change in the fire test applied to American oil; which was far more prohibitory as a mode of protection than any advance in the customs tariff would have been.

The Hamilton Times thus refers to a resolution adopted at the last meeting of the School Board here:—"In Peterborough a very effectual scheme has been adopted to make the school teachers attentive to their duties. The Board has decided to charge teachers of the High and Public Schools $5 and $3 per day, respectively, for being absent from their duties without the written consent of the Chairman of the Board. This sum will be deducted from the teacher's salary.

In England Mr. Chamberlain, one of the leading Liberals has dovetailed an ingenious plank into the Liberal platform. England is behind Canada in the matter of public education. Free schools as they exist in Ontario, are unknown there, and Mr. Chamberlain has made the Liberal party extremely popular, by proposing to introduce in England the analogue of the Ontario free school system. The Conservatives, of course, will oppose this, and this circumstance will doubtless have an important part in deciding which party shall hold the reins of power for the coming Parliamentary term. Liberalism is ever on the side of popular privilege and popular rights—always first in the advocacy and adoption of reforms.

The Presbyterian Review compliments the Minister of Education thus:—"The Minister of Education for Ontario has done well amid the rush and pressure of school life, to make Friday afternoon a time for literary recreation and social school enjoyment. Thus it was in our consulship of Plancus when "the Intermediate" and "Payment by Results," and the base-born efforts to make "a pass," had not driven from the school-room half its pleasures, and killed the innocent joys of nine-tenths of the children in the land. We are now to have singing, recitations, dialogues, readings, spelling matches, debates, and other things that have justas much educational value as the function of x, the combining volume of H, or the adverbial adjunct. We congratulate the Minister upon this proof of his good judgment and sympathy with young folk, and the young folk and the teachers on the addition of some red-letter days to their calendar.

Stormed and Taken.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached on Sunday Morning, September 27th, 1885.

"And Abimelech gat him up to Mount Zalmon, he and all the people that were with him; and Abimelech took an axe in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it, and laid it on his shoulder.....And all the people likewise cut down every man his bough, and followed Abimelech, and put them to the hold, and set the hold on fire upon them; so that all the men of the tower of Shechem died also, about a thousand men and women."—JUDGES 9: 48, 49.

Abimelech is a name malodorous in Bible history, and yet full of profitable suggestion. Buoys are black and uncomely, but they tell where the rocks are. The snake's rattle is hideous, but it gives timely warning. From the piazza of my summer home, night by night, I saw a lighthouse fifteen miles away, not placed there for adornment, but to tell mariners to stand off from that dangerous point. So all the iron-bound coast of moral danger is marked with Saul, and Herod, and Rehoboam, and Jezebel, and Abimelech. These bad people are mentioned in the Bible, not only as warnings, but because there were sometimes flashes of good conduct in their lives worthy of imitation. God sometimes drives a very straight nail with a very poor hammer.

THE ASSAULT.

The city of Shechem had to be taken, and Abimelech and his men were to do it. I see the dust rolling up from their excited march. I hear the shouting of the captains and the yell of the besiegers. The swords clack sharply on the parrying shields, and the vociferation of two armies in death-grapple is horrible to hear. The battle goes on all day, and as the sun is setting Abimelech and his army cry "Surrender!" to the beaten foe. And unable to longer resist, the city of Shechem falls; and there are pools of blood, and dismembered limbs, and glazed eyes looking up beggingly for mercy that war never shows, and dying soldiers with their heads on the lap of mother, or wife, or sister, who have come out for the last offices of kindness and affection; and a groan rolls across the city, stopping not, because there is no spot for it to rest, so full is the place of other groans. A city wounded! Wail for Shechem, all ye who know the horrors of a sacked town!

THE LAST CITADEL.

As I look over the city I can find only one building standing, and that is the temple of the god Berith. The soldiers outside of the city in a tower, finding that they can no longer defend Shechem, now begin to look out for their own personal safety, and they fly to this temple of Berith. They get within the door, shut it, and then say: "Now we are safe. Abimelech has taken the whole city, but he cannot take this temple of Berith. Here we shall be under the protection of the gods." O Berith, the god! do your best now for these refugees. If you have eyes, pity them. If you have hands, help them. If you have thunderbolts, strike for them.

But how shall Abimelech and his army take this temple of Berith and the men who are there fortified? Will they do it with sword? Nay. Will they do it with spear? Nay. With battering arm, rolled up by hundred-armed strength, crashing against the walls? Nay. Abimelech marches his men to a wood in Zalmon. With his axe he hews off a limb of a tree, and puts that limb upon his own shoulder, and then he says to his men, "You do the same." They are obedient to their commander.

Oh, what a strange army, with what strange equipment! They come up to the temple of Berith, and Abimelech takes his limb of a tree and throws it down; and the first platoon of soldiers come up and they throw down their branches; and the second platoon, and the third, until all around about the temple of Berith there is a pile of tree-branches. The Shechemites look out from the window of the temple upon what seems to them childish play on the part of their enemies. But soon the flints are struck, and the spark begins to kindle the brush, and the flame comes up all through the pile, and the red elements leap to the casement, and the woodwork begins to blaze, and one arm of flame is thrown up on the right side of the temple, and another arm of flame is thrown up on the left side of the temple, until they clasp their lurid palms under the wild night sky, and the cry of "Fire!" within, and "Fire!" without announces the terror, and the strangulation, and the doom of the Shechemites, and the complete overthrow of the temple of the god Berith. There then went up a shout, long and loud, from the stout lungs and swarthy chests of Abimelech and his men, as they stood amid the ashes and the dust, crying, "Victory! Victory!"

NOVEL TACTICS.

Now, I learn first from this subject the folly of depending upon any form of tactics in anything we have to do for this world or for God. Look over the weaponry of olden times—javelins, battle-axes, habergeons—and show me a single weapon with which Abimelech and his men could have gained such complete victory. It is no easy thing to take a temple thus armed. I saw a house where, during revolutionary times, a man and his wife kept back a whole regiment, hour after hour, because they were inside the house and the assaulting soldiers were outside the house. Yet here Abimelech and his army come up, they surround this temple, and they capture it without the loss of a single man on the part of Abimelech, although I suppose some of the old Israelitish heroes told Abimelech: "Your are only going up there to be cut to pieces." Yet you are willing to testify to-day that by no other mode—certainly not by ordinary modes—could that temple so easily, so thoroughly have been taken. Fathers and mothers, brethren and sisters in Jesus Christ, what the Church most wants to learn this day is that any plan is right, is lawful, is best, which helps to overthrow the temple of sin, and capture this world for God. We are very apt to stick to the OLD MODES OF ATTACK.

We put on the old-style coat of mail. We come up with the sharp, keen, glittering steel spear of argument, expecting in that way to take the castle, but they have a thousand spears where we have ten. And so the castle of sin stands. Oh, my friends, we will never capture this world for God by any keen sabre of sarcasm, by any glittering lances of rhetoric, by any sapping and mining of profound disquisition, by any gunpowdery explosions of indignation, by sharp shootings of wit, by howitzers of mental strength made to swing shell five miles, by cavalry horses gorgeously caparisoned, pawing the air. In vain all the attempts on the part of these ecclesiastical foot soldiers, light horsemen, and grenadiers.

UNCONVENTIONAL WARFARE.

My friends, I propose this morning a different style of tactics. Let each one go to the forest of God's promise and invitation, and hew down a branch, and put it on his shoulder, and let us all come around these obstinate iniquities, and then, with this pile, kindled by the fires of a holy zeal and the flames of a consecrated life, we will burn them out. What steel cannot do fire may. And I, this morning, announce myself in favor of any plan of religious attack, however radical, however odd, however unpopular, however hostile to all the conventionalities of Church and State. We want more heart in our song, more heart in our almsgiving, more heart in our prayers, more heart in our preaching. Oh, for less of Abimelech's sword, and more of Abimelech's conflagration! I have often heard sung artistically by four birds perched on their Sunday roost in the gallery, until I thought of Jenny Lind, and Nilsson, and Sontag, and all the other warblers; but there came not one tear to my eye, nor one master emotion to my heart. But one night I went down to the African Methodist meeting-house in Philadelphia, and at the close of the service a black woman, in the midst of the audience, began to sing that hymn, and all the audience joined in, and we were floated some three or four miles nearer heaven than I have ever been since. I saw with my own eyes that "Fountain filled with blood,"—red, agonizing, sacrificial, redemptive—and I heard the crimson plash of the wave as we all went down under it:

"There is a fountain filled with blood"

"For sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

Oh, my friends, the Gospel is not a syllogism; it is not casuistry, it is not polemics, or the science of squabble. It is it is warm-hearted invitation; it is leaping, bounding, flying good news; it is effloresent with all light; it is rubescent with all glow; it is arborescent with all sweet shade. I have seen the sun rise on Mount Washington, and from the Tip-top House; but there was no beauty in that compared with the day-spring from on high when Christ gives light to a soul. I have heard Parepa sing; but there was no music in that compared with the voice of Christ when He said: "Thy sins are forgiven thee; go in peace." Good news! Let every one cut down a branch of this tree of life and wave it. Let him throw it down and kindle it. Let all the way from Mount Zalmon to Shechem be filled with the tossing joy. Good news! This bonfire of the Gospel shall consume the last temple of sin, and will illumine the sky apocalyptic joy that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. Any new plan that makes a man quit his sin, and that prostrates a wrong, I am as much in favor of as though all the doctors, and the bishops, and the archbishops, and the synods, and the academical gownsmen of Christianity sanctioned it. The temple of Berith must come down, and I do not care how it comes.

BLOOD-RED FACT;

THE POWER OF EXAMPLE.

Still further, I learn from this subject the power of example. If Abimelech had sat down on the grass and told his men to go and get the boughs, and go out to the battle, they would never have gone at all, or, if they had, it would have been without any spirit or effective result; but when Abimelech goes with his own axe and hews down a branch, and with Abimelech's arm puts it on Abimelech's shoulder, and marches on—then, my text says, all the people did the same. How natural that was! What made Garibaldi and Stonewall Jackson the most magnetic commanders of this century? They always rode ahead. Oh, the overcoming power of example! Here is a father on the wrong road; all his boys go on the wrong road. Here is a father who enlists for Christ; his children enlist.

I saw, in some of the picture galleries of Europe, that before many of the great works of the masters—the old masters—there would be sometimes four or five artists taking copies of the pictures. These copies they were going to carry with them, perhaps to distant lands; and I have thought that your life and character are a masterpiece, and it is being copied, and long after you are gone it will bloom or blast in the homes of those who knew you, and be a Gorgon or a Madonna. Look out what you say. Look out what you do. Eternity will hear the echo. The best sermon ever preached is a holy life. The best music ever chanted is a consistent walk.

STRONG LEVERAGE.

I saw, near the the beach a wrecker's machine. It was a cylinder with some holes at the side, made for the thrusting in of some long poles with strong leverage; and when there is a vessel in trouble or going to pieces out in the roiling, the wreckers shoot a rope out to the suffering men. They grasp it and the wreckers turn the cylinder, and the rope winds around the cylinder, and those who are shipwrecked are saved. So at your feet to-day there is an influence with a tremendous leverage. The rope attached to it swings far out into the billowy future. Your children, your children's children, and all the generations that are to follow, will grip that influence and feel the long-reaching pull long after the figures of your tombstone are so near worn out that the visitor cannot tell whether it was in 1885, or 1785, or 1685 that you died.

Still further, I learn from this subject the advantages of

CONCERTED ACTION.

If Abimelech had merely gone out with a tree-branch, the work would not have been accomplished, or if ten, twenty, or thirty men had gone; but when all the axes are lifted, and all the sharp edges fall, and all these men carry each his tree-branch down and throw it about the temple, the victory is gained—the temple falls. My friends, where there is one man in the Church of God this day shouldering his whole duty, there are a great many who never lift an axe or swing a bow.

Oh, we all want our boat to get over to the golden sands, but the most of us are seated either in the prow or in the stern, wrapped in our striped shawl, holding a big-handled sunshade, while others are blistered in the heat, and pull until the oar-locks groan, and the blades bend till they snap. Oh, religious sleepy-heads, wake up! While we have in our church a great many who are toiling for God, there are some too lazy to brush the flies off their heavy eyelids.

THE MALINGERERS.

Suppose, in military circles, on the morning of the battle the roll is called, and out of a thousand men only a hundred men in the regiment answered. What excitement there would be in the camp! What would the colonel say? What high talking there would be among the captains, and majors, and the adjutants! Suppose word came to headquarters that these delinquents excused themselves on the ground that they overslept themselves, or that the morning were damp and they were afraid of getting their feet wet, or that they were busy cooking rations. My friends, this is the morning of the day of God Almighty's battle! Do you not see the troops? Hear you not all the trumpets of heaven and all the drums of hell? Which side are you on? If you are on the right side, to what cavalry troop, to what artillery service, to what garrison duty do you belong? In other words, in what Sabbath School do you teach? in what prayer meeting do you exhort? to what penitentiary do you declare eternal liberty? to what almshouse do you announce the riches of heaven? What broken bone of sorrow have you ever set? Are you doing nothing? Is it possible that a man or a woman sworn to be a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ is doing nothing? Then hide the horrible secret from the angels. Keep it away from the book of judgment. If you are doing nothing do not let the world find it out, less they charge your religion with being a false-face. Do not let your cowardice and treason be heard among the guardians about the throne, lest they forget the sanctity of the place and curse your betrayal of that cause for which they agonized and died.

SWORN TO SERVICE.

May the eternal God rouse us all to action! As for myself, I feel I would be ashamed to die now and enter heaven until I have accomplished something more decisive for the Lord that bought me. I would like to join with you in an oath, with high hand uplifted to heaven, swearing new allegiance to Jesus Christ, and to work more for His kingdom. Are you ready to join with me in some new work for Christ? I feel that there is such a thing as claustral piety, that there is such a thing as insular work; but it seems to me that what we want now is concerted action. The temple of Berith is very broad, and it is very high. It has been going up by the hands of men and devils, and no human enginery can demolish it; but if the fifty thousand ministers of Christ in this country should each take a branch of the tree of life, and all their congregations should do the same, and we should march on and throw these branches around the great temples of sin, and worldliness, and folly, it would need no match, or coal or torch of ours to touch off the pile; for, as in the days of Elijah, fire would fall from heaven and kindle the bonfire of Christian victory over demolished sin. It is kindling now! Huzzah! The day is FALSE REFUGES.

Still further, I learn from this subject the danger of false refuges. As soon as these Shechemites got into the temple they thought they were safe. They said: "Berith will take care of us. Abimelech may batter down everything else; he cannot batter down this temple where we are now hid." But very soon they heard the timbers crackling, and they were smothered with smoke and they miserably died. And you and I are just as much tempted to false refuges. The mirror this morning may have persuaded you that you have a comely cheek; your best friends may have persuaded you that you have elegant manners. Satan may have told you that you are all right; but bear with me if I tell you that if unpardoned you are all wrong. I have no clinometer by which to measure how steep is the inclined plane you are descending, but I know it is very steep. "Well," you say, "if the Bible is true I am a sinner. Show me some refuge; I will step right into it."

I suppose every person in this audience this moment is stepping into some kind of refuge. Here you step in

THE TOWER OF GOOD WORKS.

You say: "I shall be safe here in this refuge." The battlements are adorned; the steps are varnished; on the wall are pictures of all the suffering you have alleviated, and all the schools you have established, and all the fine things you have ever done. Up in that tower you feel you are safe. But hear you not the tramp of your unpardoned sins all arouud the tower? They each have a match. They are kindling the combustible material. You feel the heat and the suffocation. Oh, may you leap in time, the Gospel declaring: "By the deeds of the law shall no flesh living be justified."

"Well," you say, "I have been driven out of that tower; where shall I go?" Step into this tower of indifference. You say: "It this tower is attacked it will be a great while before it is taken." You feel at ease. But there is an Abimelech, with ruthless assault, coming on. Death and his forces are gathering around, and they demand that you surrender everything, and they clamor for your immortal overthrow, and they throw their skeleton arms in the windows, and with their iron fists they beat against the door, and while you are trying to keep them out you see the torches of judgement kindling, and every forest is a torch, and every mountain a torch, and every sea a torch, and while the Alps, and Pyrenees, and Himalayas turn into a live coal, blown redder and redder by the whirlwind breath of a God omnipotent, what will become of your refuge of lies.

AN IMPREGNABLE REFUGE.

"But," says some one, "you are engaged in a very mean business, driving us from tower to tower." Oh, no! I want to tell you of a Gibraltar that never has been and never will be taken; of a bulwark that the judgment earthquakes cannot budge. The Bible refers to it when it says: "In God is thy refuge, and underneath thee are the everlasting arms." Oh, fling yourself into it! Tread down unceremoniously everything that intercepts you. Wedge your way there. There are enough hounds of death and peril after you to make you hurry. Many a man has perished just outside the tower, with his foot on the step, with his hand on the latch. Oh, get inside! Not one surplus second have you to spare. Quick, quick, quick!

Great God, is life such an uncertain thing? If I bear a little too hard with my right foot on the earth, does it break through into the grave? Is this world which swings at the speed of thousands of miles an hour around the sun going with tenfold more speed toward the judgment day? Oh, I am overborne with the thought, and in the conclusion I cry to one and I cry to the other: "Oh, time! Oh, eternity! Oh, the dead! Oh, the judgment day! Oh, Jesus! Oh, God!" But catching at the last apostrophe, I feel that I have something to hold on to; for "in God is thy refuge, and underneath thee are the everlasting arms." And, exhausted with my failure to save myself, I throw my whole weight of the body, mind, and soul on this divine promise, as a weary child throws itself into the arms of its mother; as a wounded soldier throws himself on the hospital pillow; as a pursued man throws himself into the refuge; for "in God is thy refuge, and underneath thee are the everlasting arms:" Oh, for a flood of tears with which to express the joy of this eternal rescue!

Dufferin Literary Club.

The Dufferin Literary Club has been reorganized for the coming winter season, and will, no doubt, have a successful series of meetings during the long nights of winter. We have been supplied with the following list of officers elected:—

HONORARY PRESIDENT—Mr. D. W. Dumble (re-elected).

PRESIDENT—Mr. J. H. Long.

VICE-PRESIDENT—Mr. S. R. Armstrong.

SECRETARY—Mr. E. A. Peck.

GENERAL COMMITTEE—Messrs. A. Stevenson, A. Clegg, and the officers of the Club.

Call at Hall, Innes & Co's., and leave your order for an Uncrushable Plush Mantle, in Black or Seal Brown. These are the Latest Novelty in the London Market.

Fine Furniture.

Messrs. Craig & Mooney have just finished for one of the town fathers a remarkably handsome set of drawing room furniture, that for elegance of design and excellence of finish will compare favorably with the work of any Toronto house. The set contains six pieces; a sofa, rocking chair, two arm chairs and two plain chairs. The material is walnut, upholstered with cardinal and olive-green plush and ball trimming, and the backs are very prettily carved with a floral design. The workmanship throughout is of a very high order and reflects much credit on the firm. The set is on exhibition in their window on George street.

Extensive Sale of Stock.

Mr. P. Redmond, of Elm Grove, is well known as one of the most extensive and successful stock raisers in Ontario, and is continually making fresh importations of high grade horses, cattle, etc. To make room for an expected importation of Scotch cattle, Mr. Redmond is holding an auction sale on Wednesday, the 21st, when a large number of imported and Canadian Shorthorn and Durhams, Clydesdale horses and Berkshire pigs will be disposed of without reserve to the highest bidder. The high reputation of the horses and stock bred by Mr. Redmond, and their great success as prize winners should have the effect of drawing together a large number of buyers and there is no doubt the sale will be a great success. Catalogues containing pedigrees of the animals and all other particulars have been prepared at the EXAMINER office, and may be had on application there or from Mr. Charles Stapleton, the auctioneer.

We would Like to Know

If it is in keeping with the dignity of Her Majesty's service for an "officer and gentleman" to go round the country in uniform with a ten cent Gatling gun side show.

And if Captain Casey's commanding officer is aware of what he is doing.

If this steady drizzle is what old prob calls "occasional rains."

If the new by-law will prove satisfactory to a majority of the council this evening.

What they are Saying.

Nice day!—Thoughtless people.

The service is going to the dogs when a Captain of Canadian cavalry goes into the side-show business.—Military men who know their business.

Rain again; just our luck.—Centreville Fair Directors.

And ours too.—The Norwood people.

I'm going to make it hot for the G. T. R. to-morrow morning.—Tommy Beavis.

Verdict for the plaintiff in Hilliard v. Gemmel.—Dumble & Henry.

The Parlor rink will get all the custom now.—Pete.

What We May Expect.

A full house at the Telgmann concert to-night.

And everyone to be delighted with Maggie Barr's singing.

P. H. Green's new photograph gallery to do a good business.

The rain to spoil the Norwood and Centreville fairs.

John Sawers to claim damages from the Waterworks Company.

Strong winds, moderate gales from the south-east and north-east, mostly cloudy weather with occasional rains.

Hall, Innes & Co., have just received direct from London, Black and Seal Brown Jerseys, Mantle Cloths, much under regular prices.

Unfair Weather.

The steady down-pour of rain will have a bad effect upon the success of the Centreville fair, which is being held to-day, and the Norwood fair, which was also opened this morning. It certainly can't be considered fair weather.

The Voters' List.

Thursday, Oct. 22nd, is the last day for making appeals against the new voters' list, and persons having a true estimate of the worth of their vote would do well to make sure that their name is there all right, and not have to be execrating their carelessness after the elections for not having looked after it.

Sale of Farming Stock.

Mr. James Fowler, of Scott's Corners, North Monaghan, having rented his farm, is selling out his entire outfit of farming stock, implements, &c., by auction on Monday, Oct. 19th inst. The stock comprises a number of well-bred horses, cattle and sheep, and the implements are numerous and by the most approved makers. The sale will commence at 11 o'clock and lunch will be provided at noon.

The Trotting Races.

The entries for the trotting meeting at the driving park next week were closed last night. In the named trot Fanny B, McGregor's Brown Barber, Thompson's Indian Billy and Simpson's Lapidist Chief are entered. There were not a sufficient number of entries in the open event to warrant the projectors of the race in running it, and the same was the case in regard to the green trot. The named race, however, will no doubt prove an exciting one.

Street Accident.

As Mr. John Sawers was driving up George street in his buggy about one o'clock to-day, when just past Hunter street and opposite Mr. Mercer's clothing store, the street caved in beneath his horses feet, sinking the animal knee deep and throwing it over on its side. Mr. Sawers was unhurt, but the horse in its struggles was badly cut about the legs, and also injured its head, and was led off bleeding from several cuts. The accident was occasioned by a trench recently dug by the Water Works Company in extending their system, which, having been loosely filled up, had settled, leaving a thin crust above, through which, loosened as it was by the rain, the horse easily broke.

Saved Army.

The new Saved Army officers, Captain Mottershead and wife, arrived on Saturday evening from Belleville to take charge of this station. Quite a number of the soldiers and friends marched to the station to meet them and on their arrival extended a hearty welcome. On returning to the hall, the usual exercises of singing and prayer were engaged in, after which Gen. Lindsay called the meeting to order and introduced the Captain and his bride. The Captain, after returning thanks, read a portion of Scripture, and and afterwards the usual testimony, prayer and praise were engaged in. Sunday afternoon and evening meetings in the Opera House were largely attended. The new captain delivered excellent addresses on each occasion, and made a good impression on those who were fortunate enough to attend. He is undoubtedly clever, and appears to have a natural gift and a happy manner. He is ably supported by his wife and Captain Carter, who seems to throw life into the meetings. The corps of this station may be considered fortunate in securing the services of officials who seem to be possessed with talent. Meetings will be continued every evening during the week in their Hall, and probably in Bradburn's Hall on Sunday.

WIT AND HUMOR.

A crooked man often finds himself in straightened circumstances.

It is said that a good book is the best companion a man can have. This, we imagine, is especially so if it happens to be a bank-book.

Carlyle says: "Laughter means sympathy." This will bring comfort to the man who has inadvertently trodden on a banana peel.

A poet in a contemporary sings: "Darkness creeps about us, as the night is coming on." The truth of the sentiment is at once apparent.

The woman who made a pound of butter out of the cream of a joke, and the cheese from the milk of human kindness, has since washed the close of a year.

Canada is entitled to the name of "The land of the free and the home of the knave." The American knave has too much freedom over there.—Norristown Herald.

A scientific exchange says that a woman can grow seven crops of hair between the ages of 15 and 45. If this is the case, why should some of them refuse to allow their husbands to grow more than one crop.—Atlanta Constitution.

Sharper than a Lawyer.

A wag of a lawyer, says the Iowa State Register, was sitting in his office the other day deeply engaged in unravelling some knotty question, when a gentleman entered and inquired,—

"Is this Mr. Z——?"

The student of Blackstone, raising his eyes from the legal book before him, replied,—

"If you owe me anything, or have any business in my line, then Z——is my name; if you have a claim to present, I am not the man. If you called simply for a social chat, you can call me any name you choose."

"I propose to present you with some business in your line. I have a note of twenty-five dollars, which I want you to collect."

So saying, he handed the lawyer a note, and departed to call again the next day. As soon as he was gone the lawyer ascertained that it was one of his own promises to pay.

The next day his client again appeared, and inquired,—

"Well, what success?"

"All right; I have collected the money. Here it is, less my fees," handing him fifteen dollars.

"Good!" said the client. "I have made two dollars and a half by this operation.

"How so?" said the lawyer.

"Well," replied the client, "I tried all over the city to sell your note for twelve dollars and a half, and couldn't do it"

Three Hundred and Fifty Years.

Jacques Cartier arrived at the Indian village of Hochelaga on October 2, or, allowing for the Gregorian change in style, on October 12, 1535—three hundred and fifty years ago to-day. It is not a little singular that neither Cartier nor Champlain left direct descendants in the colony. Cartier died childless at St. Malo. Champlain brought a young wife with him to Quebec, the Indians taking her for a beautiful spirit and wondering greatly at the small mirror which hung from her girdle. But she pined for her native France, and her husband carried her back at the end of four years. They never met again. He died in Canada, bequeathing his fortune to the Church, and ten years after his death she entered an Ursuline convent in France. Why they thus parted is a mystery. They had no children. Champlain and his brother-in-law, Baulie, figure in the Church register of Quebec as godfathers and witnesses to marriage acts, etc., but neither left descendents. It is true that a Three Rivers family, and also one near Quebec, claimed to have inherited Champlain's blood, but their case was defective. One of these claimants was named after the seigneurie of Champlain, and the other bore the name of a captain in the merchant service who signed himself Chamblain, not Champlain. So, also, the late Sir George Cartier was erroneously supposed to have navigator. This was a mistake which Sir George himself more than once corrected in Parliament. If a thorough test were applied it would probably be found that the popular belief that the Cabots of Massachusetts are the descendents of John Cabot, the immortal discoverer, is also erroneous.

The first French family to settle in Quebec was that of Louis Herbert, the apothecary, which arrived in 1617 from Acadia. Herbert's descendants now number thousands. Herbert left France for America in 1606, having first married Marie Rollet; so that he was an old settler on this continent when the Pilgrim Fathers (1620) were rank greenhorns. Not only that, but his daughter, Guillemette, born in America, was married in Quebec on August 1, 1621, only ten weeks after the celebration of the first marriage in the New England colony, the contracting parties in the latter being Edward Winslow and Susanna White (May 12, 1622), who were both immigrants.

Cartier found Hochelaga an Indian settlement, a village of wigwams thrown together for purposes of defence somewhat in the form of a horse-shoe, with patches of tobacco and Indian corn. To-day Montreal has a population of 125,000 souls, and the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway marks the beginning of an era of greater prosperity, much more rapid growth, and still more wonderful possibilities.—Mail.

A New Church Dedicated.

A new Methodist Church was opened and dedicated on the Warsaw circuit on Sabbath, 4th inst., by Rev. Dr. Bredin, President of Bay of Quinte Conference: The congregations were large at each service. Dr. Bredin preached morning and evening, and Rev. James McFarlane in the afternoon. On Monday afternoon and evening, following, some 400 persons were present at a social tea. Addresses were delivered by Revs. F. McAmmond, J. McFarlane and I. Tovell, superintendent of the district. Appropriate music was rendered by the Warsaw choir. A balance of $260 on the cost of the building being unprovided for, Mr. Tovell asked the congregation to subscribe the amount then and there, which they did in a most cheerful manner, thus leaving this neat little church entirely free from debt. Rev. W. W. Lloyd has charge of the Warsaw circuit.

An Old Church Renovated.

The Bethel Methodist Church, on the Janetville circuit, in the Peterborough district, has just put on a new and beautiful appearance. $600 have been expended in improvements. On Sunday last Rev. J. C. Wilson preached the re-opening sermons to large congregations. The tea-meeting on Monday evening was a great success. A balance of $100 being wanted to meet the entire cost of improvements, Rev. I. Tovell proposed, in the course of his address, that the amount be raised. The audience seemed to take pleasure in doing so, and so no debt stands on the Bethel church. Revs. R. T. Courtice, J. C. Wilson, and the Janetville choir added much to the interest of the meeting. Rev. John Poner has reason to be encouraged in his work on this promising field of labor.

Riel's Appeal.

On the Application of Riel's Counsel the Hearing Adjourned.

A special cable despatch to the Globe, dated Oct. 13th, says that the application on behalf of Riel for leave to appeal to the Imperial Privy Council was made to-day. After a brief agreement at the request of the appellant's council the Court granted an adjournment till Wednesday week, the 21st inst., in order to allow Mr. Fitzpatrick to be present, who, it is understood, is now on he ocean on his way here.

The Lakefield Exhibition.

Ballilebore Prize List.

The following corrections of the prize list of the Smith, Ennismore and Lakefield Agricultural Society have been forwarded us for publication. The fact of these being sent only adds emphasis to the remarks made by the EXAMINER in reference to the carelessness of judges in recording the numbers representing the prize winners. If the judges put down No. 95 for a prize when they should have recorded No. 98, John Smith, who is represented by 95, according to the prize list, gets a prize, while John Brown, represented by 98, whose article really bore the prize ticket, will not appear in the list as compiled from the judges' books. If the judges [illegible] newspapers won't make any mistakes and the publication of such corrections as appear below will not be necessary. The gross carelessness of the judges is entirely responsible:

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The W.C.T.U. held a special meeting on Saturday afternoon, in the Temperance Hall to discuss business matters in connection with the Union, and to appoint officers for the next year, it being the close of the term. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Mrs. John Wilson; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. A. W. Paton, Mrs. A. Clark and Mrs. Orr; Treasurer, Mrs. Fuller; Senior Recording Secretary, Miss A. Wilson; Corresponding Secretary, Miss M. Anderson; Auditor, Miss Davis; Committee, Misses Wilson and Davis. The W. C. T. U. will meet every alternate Saturday in the Temperance Hall, meeting to commence at 2 o'clock, p.m. Since the organization of this Union a number of the ladies of the town have been faithful attendants at the meetings and deserve credit for their punctuality and perseverance in the cause, as they have had a good deal to discourage them, the retiring president, Mrs. A. M. Paton, being only once absent during her term of office. We think there are quite a number who have their names enrolled on the books, and more belonging to the different churches who should have, might spare an hour or two from their home duties once in two weeks to attend this Union, and give encouragement by their presence itself to those who bear the burden of the work.

The Band of Hope, under the able management of Miss Morton, Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Wilson, is indeed a credit to those ladies. The songs, recitations and readings for such small children are particularly well rendered. The parents of the children would enjoy a treat by visiting the Band of Hope, as well as encourage the little people by their presence.

The C.L.S.C. met on Monday evening in Mr. Scriver's office. This being the first meeting for study, all the subjects were not discussed as fully as could be wished; nevertheless, some very interesting papers from Rev. W. Limbert and Mr. J. H. Scriver were read, after which followed a discussion on these subjects. The programme was then made out for next meeting, which will be held at Mrs. Orr's, Saturday, Oct. 24th.

A musical and literary entertainment will be given under the auspices of the R. T. of T., on Friday, the 23rd inst, in the Temperance Hall, when a good programme will be furnished. The public at large are cordially invited to attend.

The H. L. A., has again reopened for its half yearly term. We hope the ladies and gentlemen of our village, old and young, but especially the young, will see that it is to their interest and advancement to become members of this society. Even if we have a fair share of knowledge and education, we must not despise the day of small things, as some are inclined to do, but be liberal with our knowledge for the benefit of others, and thereby have our own minds brightened on many subjects we may have become rusty upon.

The Quality of Mercy.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

"That mercy which I to others show, that mercy show to me."—

One of the chief elements of some men's characters is revenge. Such men do not know what charity or forgiveness means. They have no mercy and their chief delight appears to be to inflict upon others all the injury they can. No matter how excusable the offence, no matter what the consequences may be upon the individual sufferer, he must be outlawed and punished. The appeals by a generous people to his better nature are sneered at, and the prayers of the wife and children of the supposed offender excite in his breast not one particle of sympathy nor one feeling of pity. And so long as the implacable persecutor can gratify his vindictiveness and spite, so long does he feel happy and content. A feeling of human compassion is no part of his nature. And although, through old age and infirmity, standing upon the brink of the grave, and knowing that he must soon give an account of the deeds done in the body, and although saying, if he ever prays, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." Yet these divine words have no effect upon his soul, and his actions and thoughts are ever for revenge. For to him revenge is sweet, even if followed by an eternity of sorrow. Such a man ought to, and will, stand alone, and must be without friends. His whole existence must be one of isolation and hate. He lives in perpetual hostility to all around him, and his associates are such, not from choice, but from necessity. Upon such a man the sun never shines. Wrapped up in his fancied superiority he imagines himself above popular feeling and respect. Pride and contempt of others are his constant companions, and so long as he is above reach, he cares not for either love or hate, and he looks upon his victims as so many sacrifices to his dignity and person. He never thinks of the sorrow which he causes or the tears of those dependent upon him. In fact he has no real, Christian, human nature, and if he can only overpower and crush out the rights and the self-respect of others he is content and he feels happy. To such a man as this life must be full of misery and even regret, for his harshness must sometimes still his soul and make him wish he had done better, and if he ever looks forward to a death-bed, and if he could only look beyond he would fear to cross the angry waters and go into the eternity beyond, for he has disobeyed the injunctions of love and forgiveness and mercy of Him who came to make man better and to save. Such persons as this are unfortunately found everywhere, and they show, by contrast, the goodness and the virtues of others. One man's love of gain takes away all human sympathy and feeling. Another man's ambition offers up the lives of thousands of men, and another will look upon sorrow and misery because his pride and his vanity make him deaf to their pleadings for compassion and help. And so, all through the world, the tide of human suffering and sorrow flows on, and the good and the bad are alike crying out for pity, which they never receive. But when the day of reckoning comes and the Book is opened and the sentence goes forth, "Depart ye, depart ye," then, when too late, repentance comes—for the sentence is, that mercy which you to others showed, that mercy I show to you.

Peterborough, Oct. 15th, 1885.

Keene.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Our fine weather has lasted well, and the storm of to-day (Tuesday) has been long in gathering. Bad for the Norwood fair.

"A butcher, a baker, a candlestick-maker." Well, we have a butcher (once a week), and we are to have the othes two directly. In fact the third named industry is already established amongst us, as Mr. Stewart from Norwood, has opened a tin shop, etc., in the old Montreal House, near the bridge. The baker, Mr. Searight, also from Norwood, will soon be at work in the premises partly occupied by Mr. Weekes, shoemaker, and owned by Phillip Elmhirst, Esq. The bake-shop is a good one, and if Mr. Searight produces as good bread as Mr. Murray, of Hastings, has so long furnished us with tri-weekly, we will feel quite proud of our aquisition.

Mr. and Mrs. Searight, sen., accompany their son, and will probably reside here permanently.

Mrs. Harrison, sen., is visiting her son, Dr. Harrison.

Mrs. Spence, of Toronto, mother of Mr. Spence, the Scott Act lecturer, is staying with her daughter, Mrs. A. A. McIntyre.

Mr. Wm. Nelson, who lives not far from here and who was a prominent worker for the Scott Act, was so unfortunate, we are told, as to lose three cows on the Saturday afternoon after the election. They were found dead in the pasture field, and a fourth one was extremely ill.

Rev. Mr. Thompson, of Hastings, preached an able and highly appreciated preparatory communion sermo on Friday last in the Presbyterian Church. The service was well attended.

On Sunday the church was filled and Rev. Mr. Andrews conducted the communion service, preaching in his own peculiar and powerful style from the words, "We will remember thy love." His after address to the members of the church as a "peculiar people" was most unique and worthy of a place in the annals of theological literature.

Mr. Kindred, sr., and Mr. Malcom Campbell were collecting this week, the portion allotted to Keene, to be raised for Scott Act expenses. We believe they were very successful, and with the aid of the accumulation of the W.C.T.U., in this place, will have little difficulty in procuring the sum specified.

Rev. Mr. Softley, incumbent, assures us that the people in the neighborhood of St. Marks, Greystock, will soon be delighted with the sounds of the "Sabbath bells" as a new one is to be hung on the above church in the course of a couple of weeks. The tower is progressing rapidly. The bell will come from Troy, N. Y.

The Scott Act workers held a meeting in the Town Hall here, last Friday afternoon, October 9th. The different polling places of the township, (with one exception), were well represented, and business matters satisfactorily arranged. The next meeting will be held in the same place, on Friday, 23rd inst., at half past two p.m. A full attendance is earnestly requested.

THE MAYORALTY.

As we announced in a recent issue, Mr. Geo. A. Cox will not be a candidate for a third term of the office of mayor, and in view of this fact, the question of securing a candidate for the position is receiving attention. We understand that a number of influential ratepayers have urged upon Mr. James Stevenson the desirability of his consenting to be put forward as a candidate, and we have his authority for saying that he will allow himself to be placed in nomination for the chief magistracy of the town. The decision of Mr. Stevenson to become a candidate considerably simplifies the question as to the mayoralty for 1886. For various reasons he will be a strong candidate, and that opponent who hopes to succeed against him, will have to present exceedingly convincing claims upon the suffrages of the electors.

THE PRICE TOO GREAT.

There is a decidedly evil principle involved in the decision of the prohibitionists as resolved upon at a recent conference in Toronto, to support and vote only for those candidates, in municipal and parliamentary election, who pledge themselves to support prohibitory legislation. The principle involved seems to be that a candidate may be a dishonest, illiterate and untrustworty ignoramus, who may for the purpose of furthering ulterior and personal ends, profess a friendship for prohibition, and the prohibitionist electors, if they are honest, aar bound to support him, even if he be the biggest rascal out of jail. Thus the prohibitionist electors would be placing a man utterly unfitted, morally or intellectually, for the position, in a seat in the House of Commons or in the Local Legislature, as the case may be. If the principle adopted by the prohibitionists be honestly and thoroughly carried into practice, such a result could not be guarded against. Prof. Foster, the versatile member for King's, N.B., is a case in point as far as political allegiance is concerned. He is a professional prohibitionist, and as such secured his election as an independent member. He has since, however, been one of Sir John's most slavish supporters. If the principle alluded to be carried out in its entirety, many an honest Reform prohibitionist will find himself voting for an exponent of political principles utterly abhorrent to his conscience. The object aimed at is a good one, but the means is open to the most serious abuse. A political platform with one plank is altogether too narrow to afford safe standing room to an honest elector. Many a conscientious ballot-holder will find himself voting for a professed prohibitionist, only to find that he has helped to place power in the hands of an unscrupulous rascal, who has traded on the credulity of his dupes. The cast-iron rule will defeat the object of securing honest representatives, and instead of promoting the cause of temperance is more likely to bring it into contempt. The price to be paid for advancing the interests of morality is altogether too great. We are not justified in doing evil that good may come.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is not generally considered that the love of a husband for his wife is a negotiable commodity, capable of having its value estimated in dollars and cents. A Rochester jury have, however, established a precedent on the subject. Mrs. Joseph G. Warner, of that city, has just obtained a verdict of $2,000 against Miss Fanny Stevens, in consideration of the latter having robbed the complainant of her husband's affections. We can't know, under Yankee law, what the relative position, under the verdict, of the parties concerned may be, but in equity it is plain that Miss Stevens, having paid the price of the husband, the latter is now her property, and, since in this matter he has been treated as a mere cypher, she has apparently secured a mighty poor bargain.

THE HIGH COMMISSIONER'S KNIGHTLY EXTRAVAGANCE.

The Ottawa Free Press furnishes the following interesting bric-a-brac dissertation:—From the bills which the country is asked to foot it is evident that Sir Charles Tupper as Canada's High Commissioner to Great Britain, keeps "high jinks in the modern Babylon; and has, to use the slang of society, "a high old time" generally. The workingman who carefully places his heavily taxed coal in the grate; and the farmer who pays enormously on every article not produced on the farm which he purchases or consumes, have the consolation of knowing that it is at their expense the gallant knight lolls in a Pullman, or dines in a palace, when in the mother land. Sir Charles annually receives $10,000 as an initial retainer or a sum larger than that which the Premier of this country obtains. When he first went to London he was allowed $1,186 as traveling expenses besides $3,997 in lieu of house rent and maintenance, or nearly $5,200 altogether. But as the sense of his importance grew upon him, so did his conceptions of his expenditure. The paltry little sum of $5,200 for travelling and household expenses was too insignificant. A beautiful mansion at a cost of $25,000 was purchased for His Excellency our High Commissioner to squander the hard wrung taxes of this country in. The house having been purchased, it had to be painted, decorated and materially improved and [illegible] paid. Then there was a garden attached to the mansion, and the weeds therein annoyed Sir Charles so much that the services of a landscape gardener were called in and $90 spent upon that service; and so, item by item the expenditure upon the house increased until it finally reached $30,000. Then the house had to be furnished and $13,000 more of the country's taxation was squandered in that direction; and altogether Sir Charles Tupper's mansion and his furniture have cost the Dominion $43,000. A sum of $43,000 is thus wasted at a time when the people of Canada are being oppressed by taxes, which in volume are unparalleled in the history of a similar number of people.

The details of the furniture purchased by Sir Charles are too numerous to be reproduced—they would occupy columns upon columns of the Free Press—but there are a few interesting features worthy of special notice. It appears that Sir Charles, as a man of experience, domiciles his servants on the fourth floor and keeps his liquids in the cellar—as far apart from each other as possible. As a temperance man he is probably opposed on conscientious grounds to any combination of liquids and servants, but where his butler sleeps—for of course he has a butler—the vouchers do not show. Brussels carpets, marble top washstands, brass and iron French bedsteads, cretonne bed vases, muslin blinds, silk plush curtains, blue velvet curtains, tapestry curtains, and a thousand and one other mysterious necessaries to a modern palace were provided. The carpets in this Oriental palace alone cost $905; and then as if this sum were insufficient, a very fine Persian carpet at $305 was thrown in, making the total for carpets $1,210. But this is only the beginning of the extravagance! It appears that this establishment is carpeted at the public expense from top to bottom; and velvet pile carpets are carried into the wash rooms, bath rooms, and the room which usually accompanies. Velvet pile carpet if you please, while the sturdy farmer and artizans who are paying for all these are thankful if they get a smooth planed pine board! The cost of silk curtains and those of other materials equal nearly one half this sum. The silk plush curtains for two windows with shaped valances, trimmed fringe and gimp and including the gilt cornices, etc., for the same two windows cost the enormous sum of $305.00, the duty paid by the people of Ontario upon 610 tons of anthracite coal! In the dressing-room was deposited a child's bedstead, for which this country paid nearly $10. Would it be indelicate to ask whose child occupied it, as the public were really not aware there was a young High Commissioner capable of being tucked into a 26x50 cot. A hair mattrass for this cot cost the country as much as the bedstead. The bed room set in the best bed room cost $750; and this does not include the cretonne bed vases and other mysteries which brought the cost of the furniture in that room up to $1,000!

A peep into the grand drawingroom revealed the georgeousness of Sir Charles taste in upholstery, and impressed the visitors with the magnificence and wealth of Canada's resources as a field of taxation. The furniture in that room alone cost nearly $2,500. There was a fine Persian carpet on the floor, and silk plush certains at the windows. A two-hundred dollar over mantle, with silvered plate on the blind frame, and velvet and satin curtains and draperies, trimmed fringe, cord, lace and tassels rolled up to $200 more. There were ottomans, conversation sofas, spoon back chairs, easy chairs, cane seat gilt chairs, mahogany inlaid chairs—in truth it would defy the imagery of the anthor of the Arabian Nights' entertainment to do this dazzling bit of oriental splendor justice. The rooms were lighted by gas shorn of its plebian appearance by the use of ruby cups, opaline cups, opal comets, pink jet moons; and then on state occasions when gas is tabboed there were gorgeous chandeliers all paid for by the people of Canada?

Other vouchers tell us of the thousand and one little accessaries—from the best scented soaps down to the two slop pails. These slop pails did credit to Sir Charles' esthetic tastes. None of your cheap "Quebec buckets" for him, as our wooden patent pails are called in England; but two pails costing five dollars had to be purchased. The glassware for liquors of all kinds were such as to delight the temperance people of Canada. They have purchased through their taxes for Sir Charles 36 plain princess port glasses, 36 sherry do, 36 claret do, 36 champagne do, 12 liquor do, 48 tumblers, 4 quart decanters, 4 port decanters, 2 claret jugs, 8 plain handled caraffe sets, Grecian, 2 plain ditto on feet, 2 claret jugs, on decanter drawer, and how many corkscrews, goodness knows! What grand wine parties must have been held when the C.P.R. magnates and the cabinet ministers visited London. But this is not all! A cabinet refrigerator, costing $90, was added to the conveniences for Sir Charles Tupper's little temperance supper parties; and also a wine bin to hold 84 dozen bottles. The wine bin cost Canada about $60. But all this did not satisfy the gallant knight's tastes; and so a liquor bottle, square shape, richly cut hexagon diamonds, costing $8, had to be added in the collection, and then a liquor bottle, cut, check and lettered brandy, costing $4, was thrown in. We have heard that brandy is good for the toothache: and it is presumable that this bottle was kept filled on the sideboard, labelled brandy, for that purpose in case of emergencies. It is to be trusted the emergency did not arise very often.

EMMELINE'S LESSON.

The July sun was beating down like rain of molten fire on the little farm-house roof, and the branches of the trees hardly stirred in the breezeless air, as Mrs. Lathrop came in from her blackberrying expedition, her basket filled with the sparkling jetty treasures, and her face scarlet with the fatigue and heat.

She threw herself down in a chair without a word of cheery greeting for the three healthy prattling little ones who swarmed around her with a thousand and one eager questions.

"Mamma, where did you get such nice berries? Can Nelly and me go and pick some more?"

"Mamma, did you ever see such a nice doll as Tom has made for me out of an old piece of wood? Look, it has got black beads for eyes and real hair. And——"

"Me tiss mamma; me sit on mamma's lap," boldly announced three-year-old Josie, commencing to climb into the desired citadel.

But Mrs. Lathrop pushed them all peevishly away.

"Don't talk so loud, Tom. Take the ugly looking fright away, Nell. Josie, if you don't go and sit down peaceably I'll box your ears. Don't you know I've got to carry these berries up to the Grange yet, and aren't you willing to leave me one solitary moment of peace?"

Tommy withdrew sulkily. Nellie cooked distastefully at the doll, which had been so beautiful in her eyes but a moment ago. Josie began to whimper under his breath. But they were quiet—that one point, at least, was gained.

Mrs. Lathrop's meditations were not over pleasant that morning, as she slowly and toilsomely climbed the weary hill which uplifted its hemlock-fringed crest between her own little farm-house nest and the terraced lawns and closely-shorn greensward of Ellisworth Grange.

Emmeline Lathrop was poor, and somehow the yoke of poverty had never pressed so heavily on her shoulders as it did on this especial morning.

The Ellisworths had just bought the Grange and come there to live during the summer months, and Mary Ellisworth had been Emmeline's schoolmate ten years ago.

They had sat side by side on the wooden benches in the old red schoolhouse, in their calico gowns, eating apples and gingerbread out of the same lunch-basket; and now she was the wife of a hard-working farmer, with three little ones to mend, and make, and contrive for, and Mary, no whit prettier or more attractive than herself, had married a wealthy merchant, and had her maid, and her carriage with its liveried coachman, and her diamonds.

Emmeline was thinking of all these things as she trudged slowly along with the heavy basket of berries weighing down her arm.

Why were the gall and honey of this life so unequally distributed? Why should she toil, and slave, and eat the bread of labor, rising up early and lying down late, while Mrs. Ellisworth, her superior in no one particular, sit in silk and jewels, with servants at her beck and call?

Why had she been such a fool as to marry George Lathrop, who had only his farm and his strong right hand, when, by waiting a year or two, she might have done as well for herself as had Mary Wyndham?

It was wrong—it was unjust; and Mrs Lathrop repined bitterly within herself as she walked slowly along the broad gravelled drive with blossoming shrubs on either side, and glimpses of fountains, marble statuary, and parterres of rainbow-hued flowers beyond.

Nor did her envious pangs grow less as she approached the house. It was a stately structure of grey-stone with Venetian awnings at all the windows, and an octagonal tower rising up in the middle, with mimic battlements, and a flag floating out in the summer air, while on either side of the flight of broad stone steps a sculptured vase was filled with flowers and trailing plants.

Mrs. Lathrop stood hesitating where to go. She had not met Mrs. Ellisworth since the family had come down to the Grange, and she hardly knew whether her old schoolmate would receive her as a friend, or merely as the farmer's wife who had concontracted with Mrs. Denison, the housekeeper, to supply the Grange family with berries and cream during the season.

But the question was soon decided.

One of the Gothic casements of stained glass was thrown open, and Mrs. Ellisworth's own voice called her:

"Emmeline, Emmeline! Come up here!"

She obeyed, and in a moment or two was in the luxurious boudoir of the lady of the Grange.

It was exquisitely furnished with velvet and satin, and white and gold, and there were more articles of luxury scattered around than Mrs. Lathrop ever knew the names of; and Mrs. Ellisworth sat there in their midst, pale and languid looking, with her ring-encrusted fingers twined in one another and her embroidered wrapper falling in graceful folds around her, seeming about as miserable as woman could be.

She kissed Mrs. Lathrop, and greeted her cordially.

"Dear me!" she sighed, "how rosy you are! What would I give for such red cheeks!"

"I'm sure you used to be fresh enough," said puzzled Emmeline.

"I never have had any health since I went to live in town," said Mrs. Ellisworth sighing, and her pale face and sunken eyes fully corroborated her words. "Ellisworth says it's all whims, and has no patience with me."

No patience with her! When could Mrs. Lathrop remember the time when honest, beaming, hard-handed George had ever failed to "have patience with her."

"He must be very cross," she said involuntarily.

"My dear," said Mrs. Ellisworth, lowering her voice to a whisper, "you haven't the least idea of it. It's scold, scold, fret, fret, the whole time. Nothing ever pleases or satisfies him. He married me for my good looks, he says, and since I've lost my red cheeks and bright eyes, he doesn't seem to care for me any more."

She wiped away with a Valenciennes bordered pocket-handkerchief the tears that were trickling slowly down her face.

"It's very hard!" said Mrs. Lathrop, marvelling within herself at this unexpected view of the reverse of the shield.

"Yes, it is!" groaned the poor neglected wife. "I sometimes am almost tempted to wish that I were dead—only then he would marry Isabel Sloane. She is in the house now, the bold-faced creature. He made me ask her down here, or he said he never would come near the Grange. I am too dull company for him, and she talks, and laughs, and sings Italian music, and contrives to amuse him."

"But your children?"

"I have none."

Mrs. Lathrop looked up with a proud maternal smile.

"I have three—the prettiest little rogues you ever saw."

Mrs. Ellisworth's eyes were filled with an envious wistful look.

"How happy you must be! My baby died when he was only one month old. Oh, I wish—I wish I had died, too! Nobody would have missed me."

"Don't talk so, please," urged Mrs. Lathrop, sorely distressed.

"But it's true," sighed the forlorn lady of the Grange. "Oh, Emmeline, the girls used to envy me when I married Paul Ellisworth and went to live in London, and I was elated enough. But I would change back cheerfully with the poorest of them all. Tell me, Emmeline, does your husband love you?"

"Love me!" echoed Mrs. Lathrop, proud and indignant in the same second. "He loves me better than himself."

"Then you are richer far than I," sighed poor Mrs. Ellisworth. "Are you going now? It is so pleasant to me to have some one to talk to who does not sneer at me."

"I will come again," said Emmeline, kindly laying her hand in the slender palm extended to her, whose touch seemed to burn with inward fever. "But I must go back to get my husband's dinner and see after my little ones."

How infinitely these home-treasures had risen in her estimation since she passed the great iron gates of Ellisworth Grange!

Mrs. Ellisworth took out her purse and paid for the berries.

"Oh, if I could only go out and pick berries as I used to do in the old days!"

Mrs. Lathrop went home, tripping as lightly along as if her course leather shoes had been the wings of Mercury.

"I wouldn't change places with Mary Ellisworth," she thought; "no, not to walk on a floor of gold and have a king's palace over my head."

George Lathrop, in his picturesque mower's costume, was sitting on the doorstep, with Josie on his lap, and Tom and Nell playing around, as Mrs. Lathrop lifted the latch of the yard-gate.

"Hear comes dear mother!" he exclaimed jubilantly, as he lifted Josie, crowing, in his arms, and they all echoed the glad cry: "Here comes mother!"

Emmeline ran forward, dropping her empty basket in the grass, and hugged and kissed every one of them as if she had been away for a month.

"My little woman," cried her husband, "I do believe you are glad to get home!"

"I never was so glad in all my life!" cried Emmeline almost hysterically.

For during the last two hours she had learned a lesson.

Bagpipes.

It appears that it is all a mistake to assume that oatmeal is the cause of the national Scotch dyspepsia. The natural interpretation of the facts that the Scotch eat oatmeal and suffer from dyspepsia is that oatmeal produces dyspepsia. "When the Times expressed the opinion it did so in perfect good faith, but now that a real Scotchman, who is an expert in dyspepsia, not only denies that oatmeal is indigestible, but explains in a perfect satisfactory way the true cause of Scotch dyspepsia, it would be dishonest not to proclaim the innocence of oatmeal. Dyspepsia among Scotchmen is the result of listening to the bagpipes, and the moment this assertion is made the truth becomes almost self-evident.

It may be urged by ignorant persons that the impression of a sound received on the tympannum of the ear cannot affect the stomach. This is, of course, entirely untrue. It is a well-established fact that certain songs will produce nausea on the part of sensitive hearers. Excursionists on their way to Rockaway by sea have often been made violently sick by hearing the steamer's band play "Whoa, Emma," and a physician of this city has frequently prescribed "Dites lui" as an emetic in case of poisoning.

It is a well-attested fact that the bagpipes, when heard by persons who are not accustomed to them, give rise to violent griping pains in the stomach which closely resemble the pains of Asiatic cholera. During the sepoy mutiny the Scotch regiments more than once placed large bodies of sepoys hors de combat by the use of the bagpipes alone. Had not Havelock's little army included a strong corps of pipers it could never have made its way into Lucknow through the vast besieging force. Mr. Whittaker speaks of the pipes of Lucknow as "stinging all the plain to life." The sepoys would hardly have described in that way the effect of pipe-playing. As a matter of fact, thousands of the rebels as soon as they heard the bagpipes clasped their hands to their abdominal regions and rolled on the plain in agony. Even those whose stomachs withstood the sounds imagined that the sepoy camp had suddenly been smitten with cholera, and became so demoralized that Havelock forced his way through the midst of them almost unmolested, and reached the residency without other casualties than the death of two wounded Englishmen, who were officially reported to have died of joy at seeing the relieving force, but who were really too weak to withstand the bagpipes.

Scottish children suffer severely from the bagpipe colic and no careful mother will allow a baby in arms to hear the pipes. When the Scotch children reach the age of 3 or 4 years they are gradually hardened to the sound of the bagpipes, and though at first they are whisky seems to be the only antidote—they are able in time to listen to "The Wild McGregor Clan-call" without betraying any signs of uneasiness. The bagpipe colic is never fatal except to infants and persons in a very weak condition, and Scotch physicians occasionally prescribe a course of pipes to patients serving from obesity. Her majesty the queen has tried this remedy with apparently good results, though it is difficult to believe that its permanent effect upon her health can be beneficial.

No man, not even a Scotchman, can suffer for years from colic without having his digestive organs impaired. When a young Scotchman has accustomed his stomach to bear bagpipes without pain it may be safely assumed that his stomach is so weakened as to be totally unfit to digest ordinary food. In these circumstances it is possible that oatmeal is well adapted to the abnormal state of his digestive organs. At any rate, oatmeal can no longer be held to be the cause of Scotch dyspepsia, and there is good reason to believe that Carlyle owed his dyspepsia to his early exposure to bagpipes.—New York Times.

Wanted; a Sidewalk.

Councillor Kelly moved at the meeting of the Council held last evening that the street inspector be instructed to lay down a sidewalk on Downie street near Mr. J. H. Roper's house. The sidewalk is an absolute necessity, and Mr. Kelly says if it is not laid down at once, he will bring in a motion for it at every council meeting until it is.

Complimentary.

Dr. E. C. Crevier, Veterinary Surgeon, Simcoe street, has shown us a very flattering letter received from Mr. A. B. Appleby, of Cobourg, in which he speaks of the extraordinary efforts put forth by the doctor to save the life of his fine stallion, "Colonel T." Mr. Appleby seems to feel very grateful to Mr. Crevier and other friends, for courtesies received.

It's there to Stay.

The Finance Committee, to whom was referred Mr. McPherson's complaint in regard to a switch of the G. T. R., laid down on Bethune street, near the Stove Works, have granted permission for it to remain there, very properly recognizing that the requirements of the Stove Works are of more interest and profit to the town than the whims of a few chronic kickers, actuated by factious motives.

Declines Re-Election.

The Review announces that Mr. John Carnagie has declined to stand for re-election as representative of the West Riding of Peterborough Agricultural Society on the Provincial Board of Agriculture, and will not next year be a candidate for the Presidency of the West Riding Society. It is understood that Mr. Robert Vance, of Cavan, will be the Society's next representative on the Provincial Board.

Protection for the Court House Park.

At the meeting of the Town Fathers held last evening a draft of the by-law to control Court House Park was submitted by Mr. J. H. Roper, president of the Horticultural Society. This by-law for the protection of this beautiful resort, acquired with the expenditure of so much labor, and maintained at considerable expense, is an absolute necessity, and there is no doubt that when finally amended by the Finance Committee to whom it has been referred, that it will effectually provide all the necessary regulations.

The Drama.

To-morrow and Friday evening John S. Lindsay, the popular Californian actor, supported by a competent dramatic company, will hold the boards at Bradburn's Opera House. The following press notices indicate that Mr. Lindsay occupies a hig' position in the dramatic world.

Shakespeare has in Mr. Lindsay an interpreter who will do him no injustice; that his conception of the sense of the text is correct we are convinced; his Hamlet is a well-cut, neat and creditable performance. –Denver Tribune, April 2, 1878.

J. S. Lindsay, who made his first appearance at this theatre on this occasion, made a decidedly favorable impression in the character of Conanchet. –San Francisco Chronicle, Oct. 10, 1874.

On Thursday evening the picturesque drama "Davy Crockett" will be presented, and on Friday the great sensational play "Cast on the World." Popular prices of admission, 10 and 20 cents, reserved seats to be had at Mennie's bookstore, 30 cents.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The New Exemption By-law Gets its Second Reading.

And is Relegated to Committee.

The ajourned meeting of the Town Council was held last evening, the Mayor in the chair and all members present.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A communication was received from Mr. J. H. Roper, enclosing a draft of Court House Park By-law; from Mr. J. McNamara in reference to lumber for his drain on Park Street, and from Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, Mr. Burnham and others recommending Mrs. Smith, a woman in destitute circumstances to the charity of the Council. B. B. McKee sent in an account of $6.10. Mr. Roper's communication was relegated to the Finance Committee; that of Mr. McNamara to the Committee on Streets and Bridges, and Mr. Bradshaw's to the Charity Committee. Mr. [illegible] account went to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Davidson, for the Committee on Finance reported, recommending the payment of the accounts of the Waterworks Company, M. Millar and the G.T.R., presented at last meeting.

The report also contained the following:—

"Your Committee would also state that they visited the property owned by Mr. McPherson and the switch siding to the Stove Works and would instruct the clerk to require the G. T. R. to remove the posts in connection with the semaphore and also to fill up the street between the switch and the main line, and also that the clerk be authorised to prepare a by-law granting the laying of a switch on Bethune street to the Stove Works, damages, if any, to the property in connection therewith, the same to be fixed by arbitration."—Carried.

The Charity Committee reported, stating that they could not entertain the application of the ladies of the Protestant Home to pay for the Board of one Connors.—The report was adopted.

EXEMPTION.

The Council then went into Committee of the Whole on the new by-law in reference to the Dickson exemption, which, after receiving its first and second readings, was on motion of Mr. McClelland, referred to the Finance Committee for further consideration.

The clerk stated that Mr. Menzies' resolution, passed at last meeting, in reference to badges for carters was unnecessary, the matter being already provided for in the by-laws. Mr. Beavis was instructed to notify the licensed carters that they would have to conform with the by-law.

Mr. Kelly, seconded by Mr. Green, moved "that the Street Inspector be instructed to lay a sidewalk on Downie street on the east side, from Hunter street north about 100 feet."

This led to demands from other Councillors for sidewalks in other parts of the town, and the matter was finally referred to the Street and Bridge Committee.

Mr. Davidson, seconded by Mr. Cahill, moved "that Mr. Cumming's bonds be returned to him as soon as he returns the roll for 1884."—Carried.

Mr. Rutherford moved "that the clerk be authorized to prepare a by-law to amend the license by-law for better regulating hawkers and peddlers."—Carried.

The Council then adjourned for two weeks.

Latest Arrivals.

The steamer Whistle-Wing brought two scowloads more of that first-class beech and maple wood to town to-day for Mr. H. Calcutt. The steamer Dora brought in a scow-load of lumber from Harwood for Messrs. Geo. A. Cox and J. D. Baptie. The steamer Sunbeam also arrived at the docks this morning, with a load of oak lumber for the Ontario Canoe Company.

A Valuable Work.

Mr. Ernest E. Hilton is in town introducing a work entitled "Gaskell's Compendium of Forms." The book is one of great value to students and business men, containing as it does, statistical, tables, and is a veritable storehouse of information. It also comprises Biographical, Synonym and other valuable dictionaries of reference, and a revised treatise on Canadian Commercial Law. The work as a whole is one of much merit, and is likely to meet with an extended patronage here.

That Settles It.

A Rubidge street young man, who for the three past summers has been lavishing his surplus cash on ice-cream and excursion tickets for a fair damsel in No. 1 ward, had for some time past entertained serious doubts of the young lady's sincerity, and when, just after dark the other evening, he saw her strolling into the Court House Park, hanging lovingly on the arm of a masher from Ashburnham, his suspicions were at once aroused and he determined at all risks to find out what they were talking about. It was just after dark, and he watched them till they sat down on one of the benches, and entered into earnest conversation. Then, creeping stealthily up behind them, he listened with bated breath to hear what they were saying. And this is what he heard: "Well, George dear, I think it would be better for us to get married now than in the spring, for Mr. Belleghem, the furniture man on Hunter street, is selling furniture almost at cost price, and I am sure that we can save $150 on furnishing the house, and a dollar saved is a dollar earned, you know, George, dear."

George owned that it was, and was just about to ask the fair one to name the day, but the Rubidge street young man had heard enough. "That settles it," he said, and slid off down Brock street, meditating on the fickleness of women, and wondering if he would be able to scare enough cash together to buy a $7.50 overcoat before the cold weather set in.

The Assizes.

Reynolds vs. Roxburgh Concluded - Judgment for Plaintiff—Baskin vs. McMartin.

FIFTH DAY.

The evidence in Reynolds vs. Roxburgh was concluded yesterday and His Lordship delivered judgment for the plaintiff, $345, the amount being based on three-fourths of the price paid by Reynolds to Dafoe for the engine. Mr. Dumble for plaintiff, Mr. Edmison for defendant.

The next case was that of Baskin vs. McMartin, in which plaintiff sought to recover from defendant possession of a piece of land situated at Norwood. Defendant claimed a right to keep the land on the ground that although plaintiff had the paper title to the property the deed he had got from one Hendron was a mutual mistake. The deed should not have covered the property actually described in it. Hendron sold an adjacent lot and the deed should have covered not only what was described in it, but the piece claimed in the action. Defendant asked that both deeds should be set aside and rectified or reformed. Judgment was reserved pending the decision of a case bearing on it now in progress in the Court of Appeal. Mr. D. W. Dumble for plaintiff, Mr. Peck and G. T. Blackstock for defendant.

This case concluded the docket.

The Telgmann Concert.

A large and appreciative audience assembled in Bradburn's Opera House to enjoy the musical and literary evening provided by the famous Telgmann family, Miss Maggie Barr and Miss McGarry. The concerted pieces by the Telgmann's were rendered with a fidelity and taste seldom surpassed, and were rapturously applauded. The piano and violin solos of Mr. Oscar Telgman were played in a brilliant and masterly manner that betrayed the true artist and well deserved the applause accorded him, but to little Doretta fell the lion's share of the evening's honors, the audience apparently being carried away by the accomplished manner in which that little artist wielded the bow. Miss Barr's pathetic rendering of the old Scotch airs at once made her a great favorite and she was vociferously encored at each appearance. Miss McGarry proved herself an elocutionist of no mean order, her pronunciation being clear and distinct, her voice sympathetic and her gestures appropriate and graceful. The entertainment as a whole was of a high order and well deserving of patronage Mr. J. S Parker, organist of St. Paul's Church, played Miss Barr's accompaniments with rare taste and good judgment.

C. V. Boughton Loses His Suit.

The case of Boughton vs. Citizens Insurance Company was concluded at Toronto yesterday. County Crown Attorney Fenton was called for the defence. He testified that the case was laid before him by Mr. Eastmuir, who asked his opinion as to whether or not Boughton should be arrested. After learning every particular and examining the books he gave it as his opinion that there was ample ground for prosecution, but it was improbable whether a conviction would follow, as the sums concerned were very small. He thought it in the interests of the public welfare that the prosecution should be instituted. At the conclusion of Mr. Fenton's evidence Judge Galt addressed the jury, and said that the evidence of the county crown attorney was such that the defendants could not be held responsible. They had reasonable and probable cause for the arrest and prosecution, and he therefore directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendants, which they did.

East Riding Exhibition.

Seventeenth Yearly Show at Norwood—Even With Unfavorable Weather the Occasion a Gratifying Success.

Last Tuesday and Wednesday were the days of the seventeenth annual exhibition of the East Riding Agricultural Society, at Norwood. The first day's success was almost completely spoiled by the terribly wet weather in consequence of which many parties who had previously made entries were not able to bring on the articles represented thereby. The [illegible] ger than on any previous occasion, and the directors have reason to be pleased with the [illegible] of success that followed their good management. The ladies' department was not quite as full as in some former years.

There was a good exhibit of dairy produce and of roots, and these departments enjoyed, in the opinion of many, an advantage over the similar departments at the Peterborough Central, while the show of grain was fully equal. There were several varieties represented and a good show of each.

Inside the building Messrs. D. Smart & Son were on hand with a good display of the improved Williams sewing machines, and there were also two Singers, represented by Mr. John Foley.

In furniture, creditable exhibits were made by Mr. Seawright, of Norwood, and Mr. Doxsee, of Hastings.

Mr. John Findlay, of Norwood, had on hand a fine collection of the celebrated waggon and buggy hubs turned out in his establishment; they were beautiful articles and were finished in a most superior manner.

Mr. H. B. Ward, of Hastings, created considerable sensation with one of the celebrated "Peerless" knitting machines. It was in full operation, turning out socks, stockings and other knitted articles at an astonishing rate. It was surrounded by groups of interested farmers' wives and daughters, who watched its wonderful work with the keenest interest, and it would not be surprising if this useful article found its way into many a farmer's home as the result of the good exhibition it made of its powers.

THE SHOW OF STOCK,

in sheep and horned cattle, while not very extensive, comprised many excellent specimens. There were a few good animals amongst the Durhams. A fine herd of Holsteins from Ontario were also on the ground. Pigs in the extent or excellence of their exhibit did not claim much attention.

Horses were well represented in the general purpose class, several good colts being on exhibition, but driving horses were not up to the mark. There were two or three good teams of draught horses.

In agricultural implements the Hamilton Twine Binder, shown by Mr. Peter Hamilton, was a show in itself, and its operation was witnessed by the farmers with great interest, and its many points of excellence over other machines of its class promptly appreciated. A full notice of this excellent machine was given in our weekly edition of October 8th.

Mr. William Forsyth exhibited two of his celebrated IXL fanning mills. Nothing succeeds like success, and the way this mill has won its way into the affections and barns of the farmers, speaks volumes in its praise. During the past season Mr. Forsyth has sold a hundred of his fine mills and the result of its exhibition at Norwood were orders for five more on the spot. Mr. Forsyth has been for years devoting his whole attention to the perfection of this mill, and the result is a mill which is really superior in design and workmanship to any now in the market.

Mr. H. Owens had on exhibition four of his superior lift and force pumps whose excellent construction made many friends for them among the visitors.

Messrs. Whyte & Co. had several good ploughs.

Mr. Charles McDonald showed a Dundas light binder.

Mr. W. H. Stacy, of Norwood, had also an exhibition of pumps,

The now notorious Gatling gun was one of the attractive cards of the exhibition, out of the regular programme. The captain in command and his sergeant were on hand in uniform of Her Majesty's service.

While alluding to the exhibition, it might not be out of place to suggest to the management of the exhibition the cultivation of a more friendly feeling between the different sections represented, and the advisability of giving the exhibition of the society fixed, and permanent habitation. The itinerant system which has heretofore prevailed, the show oscillating between different points, has no doubt seriously militated against its success. The result is that the society has not as good a place for the annual exhibition as the importance of the latter demands. It matters little to the EXAMINER what point is selected, but the superior advantages of Norwood seem to point to that, being the most eligible site. With a little addition to the grounds, and the erection of a suitable building, little would be left to be desired. The great point, however, is to select some one place, and when that is chosen, the efforts of the directors towards making it suitable for exhibitions when once made will not have to be repeated every year, as under the present itinerant system and the success will be greater in every way.

At the exhibition on Wednesday the gate receipts amounted to the sum of $240. The prize list will appear in to-morrow's issue.

THE BUILDING BOOM.

The Town Growing Steadily.

Operations of the Year.

During the past year building operations have been energetically prosecuted by a number of property owners, and the various contractors and builders have been kept actively at work all summer, and are even now many of them engaged in putting up houses, and making improvements to those already existing. The following is a partial list of what has been done, and will be followed to-morrow and Saturday by a further description of what has been done.

[illegible]

On this street the extensive buildings to be occupied by the Central Iron Works and Lock Factory, have been erected by Mr. D. Gamble. They cover an area of 33x92 feet, and embrace four separate roomy flats, the lower one of which will be used by the Central Iron Words, while those above will contain the plant of the Lock Factory. The building is a very substantial one of red brick, and all the floors are supported by strong iron truss work. The brick work was done by Mr. Hartley. Estimated cost, $5,000.

Mr. E. Burnham has erected on this street two small stores or offices two stories in height, with white brick fronts, each 25x30; Mr. J. L. Hughes contractor and builder; estimated cost, $1,200,

An addition of one story has been added to William Hall's biscuit factory at a cost of about $2,000. This work was done by Mr. D. Gamble, for Mr. J. Stevenson.

STEWART STREET

To the residences on Stewart street have been added a modern white brick house for Mr. Wm. Smith, 24x36, containing nine rooms. The design was drawn by Mr. J. E. Belcher, C. E., and the work executed by Mr. A. Rutherford. The sub-contract for the stonework was let to Mr. Sherwood, the brickwork was done by Dawson, the painting by Lilly & Son, and the plastering by James Henry. Cost, $1,500.

A red brick veneered house for Mrs. J. Madden, 21x28 feet with a back kitchen 18x18. The house, which is a story and a half high and contains seven rooms, was contracted for by Mr. A. Rutherford, and cost about $800.

A double house of white brick, with mansard roof, erected for Wm. Lech by Mr. Rutherford from designs by Ranney & Blackwell. Each house consists of nine rooms and is fitted out completely in keeping with modern ideas.

The sub-contractors were: for the stone work, James Bogue; brick work, P. J. McNamara; plastering, James Henry; painting, Wm. Lilly. Cost, $5,600.

HUNTER STREET.

On this thoroughfare there have been erected the following buildings:—A brick terrace, for Messrs. Cox and Stevenson, with mansard roof, consisting of four residences, with a frontage of 88 feet by 30 feet in depth, with back kitchens. Each house contains nine rooms and numerous closets, &c. The whole are supplied with gas, and water from the water works, and fitted out in accordance with modern ideas of sanitary arrangement. Mr. A. Rutherford was the contractor; the brick work was executed by P. J. McNamara and the plastering by James Henry.

REID STREET.

Here there has been put up a two story double detached villa, for Mr. Green and Mr. E. B. Edwards, from designs by Mr. J. E. Belcher. The material is white brick. One house is slightly larger than the other, and contains 12 rooms; the smaller has only 11. Both are complete with all modern sanitary improvements, bath, gas, water works' water, etc. Mr. A. Rutherford had the general contract, and the sub-contracts were let as follows:—Stone work, James Bogue; brick work, P. J. McNamara; plastering, James Hunter; painting, William Lilly.

MACDONNELL STREET.

An addition has been made by Mr. A. Rutherford to Mr. Tully's residence, at a cost of $300.

ON AYLMER STREET

a mansard roof has been added to Mr. Stevenson's double dwelling house at a cost of about $1,000, which adds greatly to the appearance. Mr. Gamble was the contractor.

PARK STREET

Mr. J. L. Hughes has put up for himself a fine white brick, two story residence on Park street, at the intersection of Downey street. The main body of the builing is 21x21 feet, with wing 19x27. The south front has a bay window and verandah, and the west front a bay window. The residence contains 10 rooms, good cellarage, hard and soft water under cover, and arraugements for furnace heating. Cost $2,000.

ON THE GRAVEL ROAD

a red brick residence in Queen Anne style has been erected tor Mr. James Campbell, by Mr. A Rutherford, from designs by Mr. J. E. Belcher. Contains 14 rooms with numerous closets, and fitted out with all modern improvements. The stone work was done by Mr. James Bogue. Cost $5,000.

George Street Methodist Church.

The trustees of this church are considering plans for which they recently called, for the completion of the steeple of this church. The original plans required the tower to be finished with a spire, but the trustees favour the finishing of the present structure in a suitable manner, instead of the erection of a spire. Whatever plan is decided upon it is proposed to have everything in readiness for the beginning of building operations early next season.

Removal.

Owing to his late office being required for new town offices, Mr. E. B. Edwards has removed his law office to Cox's Block, George street, above the telegraph office.

Postponement.

The Lindsay Company, which was to have played "Davy Crockett" at Bradburn's Opera House this evening, having missed the train, their engagement has been postponed and they will appear to-morrow and Saturday evenings instead of to-night and to-morrow.

Painful Accident.

Mr. John McGrath, foreman in Mr. Hazlitt's shingle mill, met with a painful accident yesterday morning which resulted in the loss of [illegible] of his [illegible] morning, owing gone wrong with the saw he tried to pull the obstruction out when his hand was caught and two of his fingers cut so badly that amputation had to be performed.

Church Entertainment.

An entertainment under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of George Street Methodist Church will be held this evening in that building. A choice programme of songs, readings, &c., and kindergarten and finger exercises by the children has been prepared and a most enjoyable evening may be expected. Admission, 10 cents; doors open from 7 p. m.

Information Wanted.

Some two weeks ago a young girl named Louisa Wilson left her home near Silver Lake to go to Peterborough with a man calling himself Andrew May, a house painter here. She was engaged ostensibly for a companion to an invalid woman living near the market square. No tidings have been received of her whereabouts. Any information will be gladly received by her mother, or may be addressed to Rev. E. Soward, Kinmount. District papers please copy.

Bring on the New Post Office

A few days ago the Phelan faction were walking around offering to bet unlimited amounts of money that the new post office would be located on the lot at the corner of Charlotte and George streets, and although Mr. C. Sawers is said to have staked a couple of hundred on the Hunter street lot, few takers were to be found of the Phelan money. To day matters seem to be a little reversed for Mr. C. Sawers with a big wad of bills is looking for the parties who had a thousand dollars to bet on the Phelan lot at the beginning of the week. This betting may be a very exciting amusement for the Sawers syndicate and the Phelan faction, but the general public are getting heartily tired of waiting for the new post office, and whether on the Hunter street lot or at the corner of George and Charlotte, would like to see foundations laid, and the masons at work. Bring on the new post office.

Personal.

Mr. G. D. Maxfield, travelling passenger agent of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, and Mr. J. Richardson, who occupies a similar position with the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway, are in town.

Mr. Eavson leaves town this evening for Galveston, Texas, where he proposes going into the cattle ranching business.

Mr. Shaw is going to England by the Dominion Line of steamers.

The Eastern Warcloud.

War to be Proclaimed.

BELGRADE, Oct. 14.—The rumor prevails here that King Milan is about to issue a proclamation of war. The statement is made that troops are advancing from Nisa towards the Bulgarian, Macedonian and old Servian frontiers.

The Clouds Thickening.

The Standard says:—The situation in the East is becoming more clouded within the last 48 hours. The problem could be dealt with effectually if the triple alliance were as united as it pretends to be. The problem now for Prince Bismarck is how to settle the pending difficulty so as to prevent Russia and Austria from fighting. If the latter agree to insist upon the status quo or to force Servia to agree to it, Greece will be satisfied and Prince Bismarck will concur, but there appears to be little chance that they will agree. It is not for England to act as principal in a miserable dispute which is only of secondary interest, though she might cordially assist if Germany and Austria make the request.

A Conditional Promise.

PHILIPPOPOLIS, Oct 14.—President Stranzky states that if Turkey sanctions Bulgarian independence, Bulgaria will pledge herself to remain neutral, even though Servia and Greece be hostile.

Advice to Turkey.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 14.—The conference on the Roumelian question has embodied a collective note which is being prepared by Court Corti, Italian ambassador, to be presented to the Porte. The note advises the Porte to recognize the union of Roumelia and Bulgaria, and oppose further violation of the Berlin treaty. It is reported that prince Bismarck is really the seconder of the circular. The Porte approves the immediate taking of active measures by Turkey, unless Servia and Greece accept the situation.

Hopes of Peace Shattered.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The hopes entertained last night of a peaceful settlement of the Roumelian question have been shattered this morning by the receipt of a despatch from Constantinope, stating that the Conference has formely declared that the Porte has disavowed the Bulgarian-Roumelian union. Further news is awaited with considerable anxiety.

Prince Alexander and the Porte.

VIENNA, Oct. 14.—Prince Alexander has sent his confidental adviser on a secret personal mission to the Sultan. The ambassador will inform the Sultan that Prince Alexander is willing to go to Constantinope in proof of his devotion and that he desires a customs union and offensive and defensive alliance between Bulgaria, Roumelia and Turkey.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Lord Salisbury announces that Parliament will be dissolved on November 17th.

Hon. Edward Blake was 52 years of age on Tuesday. He was born in Adelaide township, Middlesex county, Ontario.

The Glasgow Presbytery, by fifty-eight to five, have voted in favour of disestablishment and disendowment.

The Kingston people are wakening up. Their Board of Health is the first in the Province to provide that all persons who are not vaccinated by November 1st, shall be prosecuted. They are bound to prevent the spread of the scourge, if vaccination will prevent it.

An Ottawa dispatch says it is rumored that Sir Charles Tupper is to be created a baron, in consideration of his valuable services in the interests of trade and commerce. Was it a keen prescience of the dignity in store for him that led the titled "stretcher" to spend $42,000 of the people's money in fitting up a residence for himself in London?

The impression is said to prevail in ecclesiastical circles in Quebec that the death of Cardinal McCloskey will be followed by the appointment of two Cardinals in North America, one for the United States, in the person of Archbishop McGibbon, of Baltimore, and the other for the British possessions, in the person of Archbishop Tachereau, of Quebec.

Already 478 Liberals, 418 Conservatives and two Home Rulers (these in Liverpool) are announced as candidates for the representation of English, Scotch and Welsh constituencies. Of the Liberals 246, and 160 of the Conservatives are members of the expiring Parliament. In 14 English and one Scotch constituencies there is no Liberal candidate, while 44 English, seven Welsh and 22 Scotch constituencies are without a Conservative candidate.

The nominations of candidates for the seat in the Commons for St. John, N. B., vacant by the death of the Hon. Isaac Burpee, were made on Tuesday. Mr. George McLeod was nominated as the Liberal candidate, and Mr. Charles A. Everett as the Conservative. The scene at the nomination was very lively. Mr. Everett spoke first for two hours; Mr. McLeod spoke for nearly three hours, and Mr. Everett again took the platform. He brought forward Prof. Foster, M. P. for King's, to speak for him, but the people would not listen to the latter, and as Mr. Everett would not speak, the proceedings terminated. The election takes place next Tuesday.

As an example of how the Mail manufactures public opinion. An alleged letter appears in the Mail's issue of October 14th, growling about the trouble it puts the large and expanded school section of a hypothetical inspector to procure the new series of school readers. In its anxiety to have the inspector of some rural school section, "Domine Sampson," make a point at the expense of the Minister of Education, the Mail has allowed its country correspondent to date his growl, "Toronto." This looks as though a correspondence bureau for the abuse of the Minister of Education had been established in connection with the Mail's special cable home industry.

The journals that shared the loot and their sympathisers, have taken the position that the criticisms on the illegal distribution of government printing, arose from—merely factious motives. Without going to the unnecessary trouble in face of the facts, to deny this, it may be pointed out that it is probable that the law will settle the question. It is said that a suit will be brought against the Government by the firm which has the contract for the Government printing, for damages sustained by the farming out of printing to friends of the Premier and his colleagues. It will be remembered that the Government printers, McLean & Rogers, recovered nearly seventy thousand dollars on a parallel claim, and it looks as though this patient and suffering country is fully determined to pay several times over for every job of printing or book-binding it has to have done.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

BY MYSELF.

It was a simple lover's quarrel; but between these two particular persons a lover's quarrel, or in fact a quarrel of any kind meant more than such disturbances usually do with the general run of lovers. Nora Welford was proud as she was stately; and Richard Vernes equally so. Every feature of his honest face betrayed the fine sensibilities that indicate the very perfection of strong, manly passion, masculine tenderness and unyielding pride.

They quarreled over a trifle. About what else do lovers quarrel?

"Perhaps, Nora, I had best see you when you are in a better humor," he was saying.

"As you please."

"You ask me to go, then?" he demanded, hotly.

"No," she replied quietly, with lips that trembled with their pride.

"But you want me to go?" the foolish man persisted.

The speech was certainly provocative of a taunt and tauntingly was it answered.

"You say I do," said Nora.

In an instant he was away from her reached the door. She arose and surveyed him with a stolid, haughty gaze. She seemed about to say something, but the bitter words were left unuttered, dying on her lips. For he had turned, in a momentary pause, and was looking at her with flashing eyes. There was in that look all the hauteur, pride and defiance, contending with longing anguish and imploring love, that Richard Vernes' burning soul was capable of. It was a look that she must remember to her dying day. Yet she stood there silent, in her cool, freezing way. Would she never speak? Yes. Her mouth trembled into utterance, and her lips quivered over the words. He waited eagerly to hear.

At this juncture a light step was heard to approach the drawing-room and Mrs. Welford tapped gently on the door. It was opened by Vernes, who had regained his composure on the instant.

"You are not going so soon, Richard?" she asked quietly in her pleasant, homelike tones.

Now if Nora Welford, with all her stateliness and pride, could have looked out and beyond that little room, and if her tender soul could have penetrated the future, of how many heartaches could she have robbed the prodigal devil who stood holding them over her destiny; how many bitter moments had been taken out of her life to come; how much happiness would have been hers. But, alas! she was human, not divine; and not knowing that the horoscope of her life lay in her own power, she held to her pride with that feminine tenacity of purpose that is often as commendably as it may be reprehensibly fatal.

"You are not going so soon, Richard?" Mrs. Welford was saying.

Vernes looked to Nora. Nora looked to her mother. An embarrassing pause, and then she murmured, coward that she was:

"Mr. Vernes has a business engagement to-night, I believe."

"He will return again soon, I trust," said her mother.

The lie had scarcely left her lips when Nora saw her mistake. But the words were said and it was too late to recall them.

Another look, shorter and more searching than the other, a low bow, and Vernes was gone.

"He will return to-morrow," she said to herself bravely.

"I thought I loved a woman," he muttered bitterly, when he reached his rooms. "I find I loved a block of ice. Ice doesn't have hearts like we flesh and blood," he continued, with a forced laugh at his melancholy wit. "Richard Vernes, you have wasted a good year of your precious life on a fair face, a lovely mind, a pure woman; but you never had her heart. Humph! Corpus sine pectore. Perhaps she has neither heart nor soul."

"Hore, John," he called. "Pack my valise. I am thinking of making a necessary business trip to New York to-night."

Next day he telegraphed for his outfit and trunks. In a week he was on his way to Europe.

You see this man Richard Vernes was somewhat of a philosopher. He reasoned that a woman who loved must sacrifice all minor considerations to her love; not to him, but to the sentiment which if she possessed it, rightly demanded supreme control over her likes and dislikes; and thus by corollary he concluded the estimable Nora, possessing more pride than love, was not for him. And with this calm, deliberate reasoning of the man, all vestiges of his once fervent love were swept away, leaving in his heart nothing but a dull, empty feeling of sadness and sorrow. Reason is ever fatal to love; because, doubtless, there is no reason in love.

He did not pause to think that he had been proud, too. And thus two souls, reveling in blissful trust, happiness and love, drifted apart, because of a little pride, not knowing that the most tender lovers are the proudest, most suspicious and cautious.

Nora began to wish she could see him again. Three days had passed and no word, no sign, as yet. At a neighbor's reception shortly afterwards a pert, saucy minx walked up to her and said boldly:

"My dear Nora, why have you sent our adorable Captain Vernes off to Europe?"

"Europe?" she echoed absently, passing off the insolent accusation with a knowing laugh. This was the first time she had heard.

"Well, I am glad that I sent him off, rather than that he should break with me," she murmured. Pride still swayed outwardly the body in whose heart love lay submerged in tears; pride still kept the tears at her will, and Nora knew that she would never cry out or make a sign.

Years, with their fleet winging, flew by, but she remained the same good, true woman. Her pride was shattered long ago, and her mind was now fixed on the determination of a martyr-like resolve. She registered a vow never to marry. Like Juliet her wedded love was dead, ready for the tomb.

* * * * *

There is a stir in the little town where Nora Welford lives, an orphan now. Captain Vernes has arrived from Europe to revisit the home of his birth. His English bride is intelligent and beautiful—combination most rare!

The captain cannot resist a strange inclination to see once more the woman he loved. He sees her pass. On her thin, worn face there is an inexpressible sadness. If Richard Vernes loved her once, his young wife, did she know all, need not fear; for the eyes that once looked with love look only with pity now, and Richard unperceived gazes upon Nora for the last time on earth.

Unhappy woman, whose foolish pride blighted thine own life and almost ruined another's! Who cares for thy pride now? Will it bring the roses to thy cheeks, the soft light to thine eyes, the sunshine to thy heart? Nevermore. Do the people who look on that wrecked woman, who gaze on that sad face, and know that sadder heart, who pity the blighted life, care for the pride that caused it all, and that was buried long ago? No. The recollection of the pride that ruined her is only a torturing reminder of the dead past, the might-have-been, to NUMBER 492.

Some years ago I was making a sketching tour in the West country, and found myself one September afternoon on Dartmoor, a few miles from Princes Town. I had been strolling lazily about for some time, when I suddenly came upon a bit of moorland, which I decided it was imperatively my duty to transfer to canvas, so I sat down on a mossy bowlder, and was soon diligently at work, and absorbed in the task of trying to represent the lovely autumnal tints on stream, rock, and heather. Intent on my picture, I took no note of time, till suddenly I perceived the shadow getting ominously long; and consulting my watch, I found it was past five o'clock, and that, unless I made a speedy start, I should hardly reach Princes Town before nightfall; so I hastily packed up my traps, deciding that I would come and finish the sketch on the following day. I was just lighting my pipe, preparatory to starting, when I fancied that I saw something move behind a large rock a few yards away, and I heard what sounded very like a smothered cough. I was a bit startled, as, save the birds, no living thing had been near me for hours; but I thought I would see what it was, so I walked up to the spot, and pushing aside the high bracken, was going to examine the place, when suddenly a figure rose up and confronted me. I am not a nervous man, but I must confess I got a start as I saw before me a man clothed in convict garb, bareheaded, wild, and dishevelled. Even in my first alarm, I remember I noticed the number 492 on his clothes, and I don't fancy I shall ever forget that number. I grasped my stick firmly, and thought to myself that I was, so to speak, in a very nice little fix. Convicts are not pleasant neighbors at any time; but a tete-a-tete with an escaped convict on a lonely moor, miles from any house, is decidedly an interview not to be desired. However, my fears speedily subsided, for my convict did not seem at all disposed to make himself disagreeable, but merely stood looking at me, trembling in every limb, and from time to time coughing in a way that shook his wasted frame all over. Poor chap! he was a piteous spectacle—his cheeks all sunk and hollow, and with his prison dress just hanging about him, he looked like a living skeleton.

The situation was awkward to me. As a law-abiding citizen, I felt that it was my duty to take some means of restoring him to the establishment at Princes Town, which he had evidently quitted without leave; while, as an ordinary human being, I felt the sincerest pity for the haggard fellow who stood there, gazing at me with hollow, feverish eyes. However, the contest between duty and compassion was speedily put an end to by No. 492 himself, for, after a more than usually racking cough, his legs gave way under him and he rolled down among the bracken. Duty fled; compassion won the day. I went and picked him up, and propped him with his back against a rock, where he gasped and choked till I really thought he would die then and there. In a minute or two, however, he revived, and in a very faint and feeble voice said: "I'm nigh starved, gur'nor; I guess it's about up with me."

I went back to get some sandwiches out of my case, and offered them to him; he seized them eagerly, and began to eat them ravenously; but again a terrible fit of coughing came on, and he sank back, saying: "It ain't no use; I can't eat now; s'pose I'm gone too far."

Here was a pleasant position. The man was evidently in the last stage of exhaustion; and even my unpracticed eye could see that No. 492 had his days, or even hours, numbered. I moistened his lips with some brandy out of my flask, and saw, to my satisfaction, that this produced a decided improvement. But what in the world I should do next perplexed me sorely, so I repeated the dose of brandy, and took counsel with myself as to the next move.

Under the influence of the brandy, my patient propped himself up again, and with great difficulty told me how he had escaped from the convict prison three days before, and had wandered over the moor, till want of food and exposure had—to use his own words—"spoilt his game," and he was going back to prison to give himself up. Seeing me sketching, and feeling his strength almost gone, he had decided to come and surrender himself to me; but when he got near, the poor fellow's courage failed him, and he had crawled away behind the rock where I had discovered him.

"It ain't no use my trying to get away, guv'nor," said he, sadly; "I'm that weak I can't walk a step. I couldn't escape now, not if a carriage-and-four was waiting for me. I'd want a nuss to lift me up into it. Guess I'll die in quod after all."

I did not think he would die in quod; but I kept my thoughts to myself, for I felt sure that before the prison could be reached, No. 492 would be far enough away, and it would only be a suit of convict clothes on a wasted skeleton that would enter the gloomy gate.

"Look here, my poor chap," said I, "You can't stop here; you must let me carry you as well as I can, and I must try and get you back to the prison." I felt rather mean as I said this, for I did pity him heartily. I knew nothing about his crimes. He might have been the greatest villain; yet I felt for him, having just tasted liberty and having to go back to captivity; and a single glance at him showed pretty plainly that the prison would not hold him long, even if we ever got there. I expected some attempt at resistance; but, to my surprise, he quietly acquiesced, saying: "All right, guv'nor; it can't be 'elped. I've had my try, but summat told as I wouldn't succeed."

It was now getting late, and the sun was just down, so there was no time to be lost, as we had a long way to go, and I was rather doubtful about my powers of carrying him, for he was, or had been, of a tolerable size and weight; but now he looked such a mere bundle of bones, that I thought I might manage it. At any rate, there was nothing to do but to try; so I hoisted him up on my back and started off in the direction of Princes Town.

I shall not easily forget that journey; it soon grew quite dark, as I toiled on over the lonely road, with frequent halts to rest, while poor No. 492 grew weaker and weaker, and his terrible cough more and more frequent. We had gone, I suppose, about three miles, when I began to feel that it was quite impossible for me to accomplish the remaining distance, as it was so dark that I stumbled painfully over the rough path, and at each stumble my burden groaned with pain, and coughed so dismally, that I felt my well-meant endeavors were only putting him to complete torture; so I stopped, laid him down on the grass, and told him that we would not try to go on till the moon rose. "All right, guv'nor," said he, feebly, and fell back fainting; so I administered the last few drops of brandy I had left, covered him up as well as I could with my coat, propped his head upon my sketching-case, sat down by his side, and wondered what would be the end of my adventure.

I looked at my watch and saw that it was nine o'clock. The moon, I knew, would not rise till nearly midnight, so we had three hours to wait. I think those three hours were the longest I ever passed in my life. The silence and the loneliness of the moor were terrible, and No. 492 lay with his eyes closed, and, save for an occasional groan, might have been dead. Once or twice he tried to speak, but apparently it was beyond his powers, and he fell back again exhausted. Once he put out his hand, caught mine, and to my great surprise, carried it to his lips and kissed it. I am not much used to having my hand kissed at any time, and should probably, under any circumstances, feel the situation embarrassing; but to have it kissed by a dying convict out on Dartmoor, in the middle of the night, was a novel experience.

I did not mean to hurt the feelings of No. 492, but I drew it away somewhat hastily; and then, seeing his lips move, as if he was trying to say something, I bent over him to listen, and in a voice little more than a whisper, he said: "Beg your pardon, sir; but you have been precious kind to me, and I feels weak and silly; didn't mean no offense."

I hastened with some compunction to reassure him that I was not offended; and again he closed his eyes; and around us once more was silence.

At last, to my great joy, the sky brightened up a bit; the outlines of the trees became more distinct, and the moon appeared over the hills, and shot a flood of silver light all over the moor. My spirits, which had fallen below zero, revived considerably; darkness has at all times a depressing influence, and under my peculiar circumstances, had reduced me to a most profound melancholy. I felt quite glad to see the moon rise, though, beyond the fact of being able to see where we were, it did not materially assist me out of the fix I was in.

I looked at No. 492 and he seemed to be asleep. I did not like to wake him, so I got up quietly, intending to walk to the top of a hill close by, and see if I could discover the lights of Princes Town, or any house nearer, to which I might direct my steps. I was not gone long—perhaps half an hour; and when I came back, I found No. 492 with his eyes wide open, and, to my great surprise—though I don't know why I should have been so surprised—tears running down his cheeks. Really, my ideas about convicts were becoming quite upset; one who furtively kissed my hand, and who wept, was, I thought, indeed an anomaly. I bent over him and asked him if he was in worse pain, or what was the matter. Poor fellow! he lifted his wasted hand, drew it across his eyes, and said: "No; I ain't in no pain now, sir; but I woke from a bit of doze and saw that you was gone; and I thought as how you had left me; and somehow I felt lonesome and afeared; and then a great sob shook him."

I assured him that I was not going to leave him, and he appeared comforted. Then, after a pause, said: "I ain't one as has been much afeared in my time, sir; but, somehow, now I can't 'elp it; it seems all of a tremble; and it looks awful dark ahead of me, and I be so weak I don't seem able to face it nohow."

I longed truly to be able to help him, and wished it with all my heart that I could do it better; but feeling rather ashamed, I tried to tell No. 492 something about a strong Hand which will help in the dark valley, and One who will be near us when of ourselves, as he said: "we don't seem to be able to face it nohow." He listened attentively and then closed his eyes, murmuring something I could not catch.

After a pause, I asked him if he would try to go on again. "All right, guv'nor; you knows best," was his answer, but very faint and feeble.

Well, I picked him up again, and off I started. By this time the moon was high up, so we progressed a good deal faster than before, and had traversed a considerable distance before I had to stop and put my burden down. Even then, I could have gone a bit further, but No. 492 whispered: "Stop, sir, now; it ain't no use; I shan't get no further."

I laid him down, and saw at a glance that our journey together was about to end. In the moonlight he looked ghastly and wan; and as I laid him down, a violent fit of coughing came on, and after it a red stream flowed from his mouth. Poor fellow! thought I; and yet I could hardly pity him really, for to him death must have come as a true friend. He lay quiet for some time, and I wiped the blood from his lips; then, just as the first gray streak of dawn appeared, he raised himself on his elbow and whispered: "I've been a bad 'un, I knows; but I didn't 'ave no chance. Say a bit of prayer for me, sir."

There was no refusing; and as I finished, his face lighted up, and again repeating his formula, "All right, guv'nor," he fell back—dead. He had succeeded in his escape, after all.

I covered up the body, and thinking no one would be likely to come near the spot, I drew it aside near the rock which I should recognize again, and started off, walking briskly to Princes town, considering many things by the way. I went to the prison, and came back with some warders to show them the spot; and, as I was obliged to await the inquest, I attended the funeral of poor No. 492.

I trust that in some [illegible] may be for him—as for many of us for whom it has been all wrong—"All right."—Chambers' Journal.

"I would like to ask you to take some ice cream, dear," he said, looking incessantly into the windows of a saloon, "but after that disastrous affair in Brooklyn a few days ago I am afraid to," and he made an attempt to forge ahead. "What affair was that, George?" she asked, holding him back with her hands. "Why, over 150 people were poisoned from a single freezer." "It must have been terrible. Still, George, dear, there is a possibility of our escaping with our lives, and if we do die"—here the heroic girl gave him a look of love unutterable—"we will die together."—New York Sun.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

For the Lumber Shanties.

Large numbers of men are leaving daily for the lumber camps, and there is every prospect of a lively season. Mr. T. Cavanagh is kept busily engaged in supplying men to the numerous firms, and reports that wages range from $16 to $18.

For Cobourg.

Mr. T. Cavanagh's handsome team of gray horses, which carried off the first prize at Lindsay and Peterborough fairs, are going to be exhibited at Cobourg to-morrow. Ted is confident that they will win fresh honors, and the team that beats them will have to be a good one.

The Trotting Races.

The named race at the Driving Park, which was to have come off to-day, has on account of the track being rendered too soft by the recent heavy rain been postponed until to-morrow. J. Daly's Fanny B.; McGreggor's Brown Barber; Thompson's Indian Billy; Simpson's Lapidist Chief; and a horse from Appleby's Cobourg stable, Nellie Bly, are the entries, and a hot race is likely to result from their meeting.

Davy Crockett.

This stirring drama will be presented at the Opera House to-morrow evening, by Mr. John S. Lindsay and a first-class company of artists. Mr. Lindsay, in his native State of California and other western States, has won for himself golden opinions, and is said to be one of the first living exponents of the drama, and an excellent presentation of this picturesque drama may be anticipated. Popular prices of admission 10 and 20 cents, reserved seats 30 cents, to be had at Menzies' book store.

Philharmonic Society.

Lovers of music will be glad to hear that there is a prospect of a Philharmonic Society being formed here during the coming season. Messrs. Parker and Hampshire, organists of St. Paul's and St. John's Churches, have been agitating the matter for some time, and this evening a preliminary meeting will be held in the rooms over Hartley's music store on Hunter street, to which all members of choirs and others interested in music are invited. A plan for the season will be presented and all initial steps towards forming the Society taken.

Call at Hall, Innes & Co's., and leave your order for an Uncrushable Plush Mantle, in Black or Seal Brown. These are the LATEST NOVELTY in the London Market.

Business Wisdom.

A perfect hum in the mantle and dress making department at the "Golden Lion." Orders are going in rapidly. Mantles and dresses are being turned out with a promptness which shows that Miss Johnston with her large staff of expert hands is prepared to execute all orders with neatness and despatch. Fair, VanEvery & Co'ys. large and excellent selection of dress and mantle materials is very attractive, and giving such satisfaction this season that it is gratifying to know they have the business wisdom to provide what the people wish.

Vaccination.

Doctors Clarke and Kincaid, in accordance with the recent resolution passed by the council, have commenced public vaccination to-day in the Lake Street Separate School Building, where they will probably continue to-day and to-morrow. The South Ward School will be the next station, and after that probably the West Ward. Anyone unable to pay for the operation, can be vaccinated free of cost; for those able and willing to pay, a fee of 25 cents will be charged. In Kingston, vaccination is now made compulsory, anyone failing to comply being reigorously prosecuted. It is to hoped that everyone will avail themselves of the free vaccination here, and render compulsory measures needless.

Peterborough Boating Club.

A Proposed Change of Constitution.

A meeting of the above club was held last evening in the office of Mr. R. E. Wood for the purpose of considering the best methods of surmounting the difficulties, by which, of late, that organization has been troubled. Mr. R. E. Wood occupied the chair. After a great deal of discussion and many propositions the conclusion was arrived at that the club could not be continued on its present basis, as the canoe membership were in reality bearing the brunt of not only sustaining their canoes, but the rowing boats as well; there being so little interest manifested by rowing men that the funds from that branch amounted to a mere trifle. It was therefore decided to make an effort to start a rowing club on a separate basis, that should take over the boats and retain the use of the floating boathouse, paying all their own expenses, entirely distinct from the canoe club, which would occupy the stationary boat house. To carry out this plan a committee consisting of G. Stevenson, W. Matthews, F. Cox, H. W. Kent and John McClelland was appointed. A second committee was struck to make a valuation of the boats now owned by the club in furtherance of the object in view.

Unless rowing men take hold and manifest some interest in the matter, the only alternative that remains will be to sell the boats and allow the rowing club to die a natural death. Considering the prestige that Peterborough once held in rowing matters it would be a great pity if this should take place, and it is to be hoped that those intereated in rowing will not allow it, but co-operate heartily in the formation of the new club. The plan proposed is to have a club in which each member shall take stock at say $10 and thus raise a sufficient sum to take the boats over at a valuation, and of course maintain their own boat house. The committee are to report at an adjourned meeting, which will be held in a few days.

Hall, Innes & Co., have just received direct from London, Black and Seal Brown Jersey MANTLE CLOTHS, much under Regular Prices.

Manvers.

Mr. Hawkins, of Manvers, has taken possession of the farm recently purchased from Mr. McRoberts, the latter removing to South Monaghan.

Mr. Jos. Porter, of Ballyduff, recently purchased a thoroughbred brood mare for $220 from Mr. Campbell, of South Monaghan.—Port Hope Times.

Belleville.

THE FIRE RECORD.

A fire early Tuesday morning destroyed a frame house on John street, owned by C. V. Bogart, and occupied by John Pepper, contractor. All the contents were burned, on which there was an insurance of $1,000 in the Western. The building was insured for $600 in the Royal. The brick dwelling adjoining, owned by the same party, and occupied by Miss Beatrice Hudgins, was badly damaged; insured for $700 in the Royal.

Port Hope.

Last Monday night, about 10 o'clock, as Mr. and Mrs. C. Garbutt, of the Royal Hotel, were returning from Bewdley, where they had been making a call on Mr. J. Warmington, who is laying there ill, and when near Mr. Sam Davidson's on the Rice Lake Road, the horse stepped on an old stove pipe, at which the animal was frightened, and turning suddenly threw both the occupants out. Mr. Garbutt fell with his head upon a stone, fracturing his skull, and was picked up insensible. Drs. Powers and Clemesha were called. The patient now lies in a very critical state. Mrs. Garbutt was badly bruished, but we are glad to state not seriously injured.—Guide.

COUNCIL MEETING.

Council met pursuant to adjournment. All the members present. Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed. James Barry was allowed to commute his statute labor for three years, the work to be done on the allowance for road between 13th and 14th Concessions, opposite lot 17, and he was authorized to expend $10 in improving said road. The clerk was directed to notify Cornelius Driscoll to remove his fence off said road. Martin Kenneally was allowed two days' statute labor for work on road opposite his place. A by-law to levy and collect certain rates on the assessed property of the township, also on the assessed property of the several school sections for the current year received its several readings and was passed. The Treasurer was directed to pay the following sums, viz.:

John Quinlan, for gravel	$ 3 00
Alex. Drummond, for cedars	2 25
James McNeil, jr., for cedars	11 88
John Anderson, for cedars	3 04

England Said to be Contemplating the Annexation of Burmah.

A London cable says:—A sensational announcement that the Government has determined on the annexation of Upper Burmah is causing much discussion, but must await confirmation. For some time all the Tory organs and speakers have been giving hints. Two articles in the National Review suggested it on Saturday night. Archibald Colquhoun, who has been the Time's correspondent all over the east, writing to the Times directly urged absolute annexation. He says the English will be welcomed; that the native army is contemptible; that King Thebaw is intriguing with the French along the Irrawaddy Valley, which is the only route for a railway from India to China through Siam; and that Burmah is a very rich country. The Burmese Ambassador to Paris denies indignantly any intrigue with the French. He says that the Burmese are both able and determined to resist annexation by anybody. The ultra-Radicals will protest strongly. Nobody of authority has yet mentioned the subject, but Thebaw's abominations have long excited disgust, and he is probably near the end of his tether.

Sowing the Seeds for Future Forests.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR,—Many of your readers, no doubt, who have not at present the time for planting may yet intend, in a year or two, to give their farms the benefit of some windbreaks and plantations. When ready they will be obliged to go to the forest for young trees, a matter of considerable labor, or to buy of the nursery-man, one of considerable expense. Let me suggest that instead, if they sow the tree seeds they will by the time they need them, have on hand as many thousand young trees as they desire, with far better sorts than the forest seedlings, and in a condition much more handy for transference to their ultimate stations. This has been a pretty good seed year, and this month is the time for gathering the following seeds:—Hard maple, ash leaved maple, or as it is now called Manitoba maple, sycamore, oaks, mountain ash, hickories, English and native ashes, walnuts and butternuts, basswood, beech, buckthorn, and hawthorn, chestnuts, locust, pines and other evergreens. Of these, such as have a pulpy covering will need bruising with a hoe or macerating through the hands, the pulpy matter then washed off, and the seeds partially dried, when mixing with sand will facilitate the sowing process. The rest should be kept in a cool dry place till they can be sown. They should be sown in light rich loam, but if obliged to use clay soils, covering the seed with sand does well. It is well to cover the seed twice the depth of itself, and tread it firmly down. Then cover all with about two inches of leaves, straw, cornstocks, or strawy manure. They must be so mulched to ensure success. In the spring, this, if of a fertilizing nature, can be raked between the rows and will keep weeds down and the soil moist; if too bulky, remove it altogether. Next summer, from a bed thus treated you will obtain thousands of plants, of every variety you have sown, and these transplanted the next season will soon be fine young trees.

Yours, etc.,
R. W. PHIPPS.

Toronto, Oct. 14, 1884.

That Settles It.

A Rubidge street young man, who for the three past summers has been lavishing his surplus cash on ice-cream and excursion tickets for a fair damsel in No. 1 ward, had for some time past entertained serious doubts of the young lady's sincerity, and when, just after dark the other evening, he saw her strolling into the Court House Park, hanging lovingly on the arm of a masher from Ashburnham, his suspicions were at once aroused and he determined at all risks to find out what they were talking about. It was just after dark, and he watched them till they sat down on one of the benches, and entered into earnest conversation. Then, creeping stealthily up behind them, he listened with bated breath to hear what they were saying. And this is what he heard: "Well, George dear, I think it would be better for us to get married now than in the spring, for Mr. Bellegham, the furniture man on Hunter street, is selling furniture almost at cost price, and I am sure that we can save $150 on furnishing the house, and a dollar saved is a dollar earned, you know, George, dear."

George owned that it was, and was just about to ask the fair one to name the day, but the Rubidge street young man had heard enough. "That settles it," he said, and slid off down Brock street, meditating on the fickleness of women, and wondering if he would be able to scare enough cash together to buy a $7.50 overcoat before the cold weather set in.

Business opened with a bid from Mr. Flavelle of 9c. for Victoria September. Mr. B. Green followed with an offer of 9½ for Victoria September. Mr. Cluxton offered 9½ for Peterborough September, and Mr. Flavelle the same for Victoria September. Mr. Green then bid 9½c. and 9 5-16 for September in both counties. Mr. Flavelle offered 9⅜ for September selections, naming Keene, Warminster and Warsaw, which was accepted. Mr. Cooke then offered 9⅜ for all that remained. Mr. Green bid 9½ for selections, naming North Smith, South Dummer, Keene September, which was taken. Mr. Cook then cleared off the September board at 9½.

Mr. Green then bid 10c. for October selections, naming North Smith, Donneyville, Warminster, Keene, Warsaw, Otonabee Union, South Dummer, Normanhurst, Cherry Grove and North Smith. After a little consultation some of these factories elected to sell and others seeing they could do no better began to come to time and although some still held out, most of the factorymen sold before leaving for home.

Died from Swallowing His Teeth.

John Steinhart, of Barnesville, Sullivan County, N. Y., an employee of the Gilgour bluestone quarries, was seized with a coughing fit a few days ago, and while coughing swallowed a rubber plate with five false teeth on it. He went to New York to consult physicians, but could find no relief. He died Saturday night in great agony.

The Poets and Poetry of Canada.

[No. 14.]

Evan McColl.

"With none of the means and appliances furnished by schools, McColl has thrown together in his "Mountain Minstrel" more gems "of purest ray serene" that could be found in a decade of lustra amongst the measured dullness of the choristers and songsters in the cities of the south. Dr. Brown.

Evan McColl was born at Kenmore, Lochfyne-side, Scotland, on the 21st of September, 1808, where he is well known as Clarsach-nam-Beann, or the Mountain Minstrel.

He early developed a taste for poetry, and in 1837 became a regular contributor to the Glasgow Gaelic Magazine. Mackenzie says "his pieces excited considerable interest and a general wish was expressed to have them published in a separate form." The poet gives a very striking account of the first local criticism his attempts at verse received and of the manner in which he was led into print. He took into his confidence a young friend who was a capital singer, taught him the verses without mentioning he was the author, and got his friend to sing them the same evening at Kenmore. Evan remained outside to listen to the criticism which was sure to follow. His nerves were strung to the highest pitch, waiting the result. But when the song was sung, it was received with great applause, and its unknown author was awarded a hearty meed of praise. From that hour McColl felt himself a bard, and became supremely happy at the thought. He published a small volume of poems in Gaelic, and another in English, which were reviewed by Dr. McLeod, Hugh Miller, the celebrated geologist, and other British critics, in the highest terms of admiration. Hugh Miller said "in point, glitter and polish, he is the Moore of Highland song." Mackenzie assigned him a high place in his "Beauties of Gaelic poetry and lives of the Highland bards." Even his first attempt at publication proved a success, and after paying expenses, left the poet a small balance.

Owing to the circumstances in which his fathers' family was placed, our author was obliged to spend his time for several years in excessive manual labor, farming, fishing and road-making. Yet during this very period of hard toil and struggle, he composed many of his best Gaelic lyrics.

In 1831, his father, with the rest of the family imigrated to Canada, but Evan remained behind. Eight years afterwards he accepted a position in the Customs at Liverpool, obtained through the influence of the member for Argyleshire. It was not without many a severe pang of regret, he bade adieu to his native hills and entered on the strange life of a busy commercial city. But even here he found time to woo the muse.

In 1846, he published a second volume of poems, which was even more highly appreciated than the first. Of this work, Norman McLeod wrote: "Evan McColl's poetry is the product of a mind impressed with the beauty and the grandeur of the lovely scenes in which his infancy has been nursed. We have no hesitation in saying that this work is that of a man possessed of much poetic genius. Wild indeed, and sometimes rough are his rhymes and epithets; yet there are thoughts so new and striking—images and comparisions so beautiful and original—feelings so warm and fresh—that stamp this Highland peasant as no ordinary man."

While a resident of Liverpool, he was the intimate friend and associate of Philip James Bailey, the author of "Festus" and of "The Angel World," of whom he often speaks in terms of high admiration. When his second volume was published, Baily thus expressed his opinion of it:—"There is a freshness, a keenness, heartiness, in many of these productions of the Mountain Minstrel which seem to breathe naturally of the hungry air, the dark, bleak, rugged bluffs among which they were composed, alternating occasionally with a clear, bewitching, and spiritual quiet, as of the gloaming, deepening over the glens and woods. Several of these melodies, towards the close of this volume, are full of simple and tender feeling, and not unworthy to take their place by the side of those of Lowland Ministrels of universal fame."

In 1850, in consequence of ill health, he visited Canada, and while here received an appointment to the customs at Kingston, where he has since resided. This was chiefly through the influence of the Hon. Malcolm Cameron. Owing to his liberal views and the overthrow of the Reform Government his position at the public crib was of little importance. He never solicited any favour from the Conservatives, and the overthrow of the Mackenzie regime in 1878, effectually quenched his hopes of preferment. He was superannuated in 1880.

He is the bard of the Caledonian Society in Kingston, and his annual contribution on the anniversary of Scotland's saint is always looked for with much interest. His "Bonnet, Kilt and Feather," and his "Lake of the Thousand Isles," are particularly good. Of one of his well-known songs, "The Robin," the Kingston Daily News says: "We consider that in "Robin" Mr. McColl has achieved his greatest success, and as an artistic production it deserves to be placed on a level with Lady Nairn's celebrated impersonation of Burns so touching and pathetic, "The Land o' the Leal."

Mr. McColl published a third volume, entitled "English Poetical Works," which issued from the press in 1883. It contains "The Mountain Minstrel," and also his later pieces. He visited many cities and towns in Canada to dispose of the work, and succeeded thereby in becoming thoroughly known to the reading public.

His mind is of a very sensitive kind. He is in truth a warm-hearted, generous Highlander, and hospitable to a fault. Several years ago Charles Sangster wrote a short sketch of the poet for an American work on the Scottish bards, in which he used this language: "In private life he is both by precept and example all that could be desired. He has an intense love for all that is really good and beautiful, and a true and manly scorn for all that is false, time-serving or hypocritical; there is no narrow-mindedness, no bigotry in his soul. In the domestic circle, all the warmth in the man's heart—the full flow of genuine feeling and affection—is ever uppermost.

He his a thoroughly earnest man, in whose daily walks and conversation as well as in his actions, Longfellow's "Psalm of Life" is acted out in verity. In his friendships he is sincere; in his dislikes equally so. He is thoroughly Scottish in his leanings, his national love burns with intensity. In poetry, he is not merely zealous, but enthusiastic, and he carries his natural force of character into all he says and does."

His family consists of nine sons and daughters, the offspring of a double union, for Mr. McColl has been twice married. His eldest son is pastor of the Congregational Church at Quebec, and some other members of the family are filling positions as teachers. His daughter Mary has acquired a fair reputation as a poet, and bids fair to gain yet greater fame, and to reflect further honor on her fathers's name.

In our next article we hope to give a few examples of Mr. McColl's poetry, in order that our readers may see for themselves he deserves the encomiums he has received from the reviewers.

Football.

Peterborough v. Ottawa.

To-morrow afternoon the Ottawa and Peterborough football clubs will play off their tie for the Ontario championship at the P.A.A.A. grounds in Ashburnham. As the Ottawas have a strong team they are not likely to follow the example of Toronto and forfeit the match, but may be expected for a certainty. Despite the late unfavorable weather the home team have been putting in lots of work, and will make the match worth seeing. The following players will take the field for Peterborough:—Back—H. B. Rogers, C. A. Lawford (Capt.); half back—H. B. Carter, W. Tanner; quarter back—G. W. Hatton, A. T. G. F. Tytler; forwards—A. St. A. Smith, H. Carnegie, P. E. S. Cooper, C. H. Geale, H. B. Newbald, C. W. Forbes, G. W. Orde, I. Carlon, A. Stevenson.

Serious Accident.

Mr. James Wasson Falls from a Train, and Sustains Painful Injuries.

On Wednesday, Mr. James Wasson, valuator for the Peterborough Loan and Investment Company, had occasion to make a valuation near Trenton, and in order to save himself a walk of two or three miles, arranged with the conductor of the train to slow up, and let him off at the diamond outside that town. This the conductor did, but it seems that in getting off the platform of the rear car, Mr. Wasson either got confused or jumped the wrong way, for he was swung violently round and hurled into a cattle guard. No one witnessed the accident, and Mr. Wasson seems to have lain in the cattle guard all night. Mr. Wasson was brought back to town last evening, and although, fortunately, he escaped broken bones, was so severely bruised and shaken that he is in a very precarious state. Indeed so much upset is he by the accident that he has not been able to give any clear account of the way in which the accident occurred, but he must apparently have lain for a long time unconscious in the cattle guard. Dr. Fife is in attendance upon him, and though the shock to his system has been very severe, it is hoped he will soon be all right again.

REAL AND IDEAL.

Fred Harding and Bella Remington were engaged to be married. Fortune smiled upon their prospective union; their parents had given a delighted and cordial consent, for they were close friends, the fathers having been college chums, who had settled down in the same village, Mr. Harding as its doctor, and Bella's father as vicar of the parish. So as there really was no drawback connected with the course of their love, Bella proceeded to manufacture one—it was altogether too smooth.

It was not worth while being engaged, she declared, pettishly, to herself, if the path to the altar was to be thus tame and uninteresting.

She looked around for a grievance, and soon became convinced that the betrothed was not of her seeking, but forced upon her by her parents.

She was bent on being a martyr, and even assured herself that Fred did not love her at all, but was coldly and indifferently carrying out his parents' wishes.

She was an accomplished musician, playing the organ at her father's church each Sunday, and leading the choir, among the members of which was a certain Victor Raymond, whose fine black eyes were in the habit of expressing the most undisguised admiration for Bella, who did not seem at all displeased thereby, especially when her fiancee was present.

One Saturday evening, when the choir practice was over rather earlier than usual, Bella found that Fred had not arrived to take her home, and gave Victor permission to do so, which fact Fred presently discovered, much to his chagrin.

He followed and overtook them just as she bade the tenor "good-night," with her hand in his.

"Bella!" said Fred, with an unwonted sharpness, as they entered the vicarage gate, "I do not wish you to accept Mr. Raymond's escort again. You know I'm always on hand to accompany you."

"Indeed, sir! Then pray where were you to-night?"

"I was there at the usual time.

"Later, on the contrary," she contradicted.

"Excuse me, it was quite fifteen minutes before your regular hour of dismissal."

"Thank you, sir! You might as well say at once that I am not telling the truth!"

"No dear; but your insisting on it does not make it a fact. I have proof that you are mistaken."

"I say I am not mistaken!" she exclaimed in a temper. "I was tired with waiting, and Victor said he was coming my way and offered to walk with me."

"I am very sorry, dear, that I missed you, and will not let it happen again. But his way home is in an opposite direction."

"He wasn't going home. He was going to skate on the millpond."

"He must be mad! Why, after these two days of thaw the ice is like a sponge! I wouldn't venture to do it for anything."

"Oh, every man is not so—cautious—as you!"

"There's no bravery in doing a perilous thing except when necessity demands it."

"Oh, I hate effeminate men!" said Bella, with a little curl of her lip.

Fred frowned, but did not reply to the taunt, only saying,—

"Promise me dear, that you will not let Raymond come home with you again! Indeed, I must forbid it!"

"Must you, indeed? Well, then I'll come home alone. I can certainly dispense with your tardy attendance, without much loss."

"I have already apologized. Won't you forgive me?"

"I am old enough to take care of myself, and in the future I shall return alone."

"Oh, no, you must not do that!" he said.

"Why not, pray?"

"Because—well, I don't like masculine women."

And he escaped before she could retort.

All the following week Bella refused to see Fred. If he called during the day, she was out, if in the evening, she was engaged, or she felt too tired to come down stairs, or had a headache.

He waited in some trepidation for Saturday night to come, for the choir would practice, and he knew she would not fail to be there, unless detained by something really serious.

Fully half an hour before the required time, therefore, he was at his post.

The last strains of the organ had died away, when Bella came tripping down the steps, and Fred came forward to meet her.

"Is your headache quite gone?" he asked quite tenderly.

"I am very well, thank you," she answered, coldly, ignoring his proffered arm, and thrusting both hands into the depths of her muff. "Will you allow me to say good-night? I am in some haste."

"I am sorry to seem intrusive," he replied with equal coldness, "but it is a lonely road, and I have the right to insist upon your accepting my escort."

What foolish and angry speech might have been called forth by this masterful declaration can only be surmised, for at that moment Victor Raymond came striding along, humming an operatic air more congenial to his ear than the melodies lately practiced.

"Ah, good evening, Harding," he said, gaily. "A lovely night, is it not?"

Fred made no reply, but Bella greeted him cordially, and made room for him by her side. And so it happened that she had two protectors upon the very evening she had determined to have none.

Their walk led them to a hill, over which they must go, or else take a much longer road. Its sides were slippery to glassiness, and the young men simultaneously offered a hand to the girl. She laughed merrily, darted forward, and choosing a part where the icy-snow was more lumpy, skimmed it like a bird, before her companions realized what she meant to do.

"I knew I could do it better than either of you!" she cried, when, after many slips and backward steps, they at length stood beside her at the top. "Is it not beautiful?"

And with a comprehensive wave of her arm she indicated the snow-clad hills and frosted trees, glittering in the moonlight like myriads of diamonds; the great round moon herself shining in an azure sky, trying her very best to out-do her day rival.

"The Scotch Express will pass below soon," said Bella, presently. "Let us wait here until it has gone by."

Just then Fred gave a startled cry, and bent forward.

"What is it?" exclaimed his two companions, in a breath.

"Look! Do you not see a figure, small, like a child's, lying there?"

"Oh, yes! Lying across the metals. Ah! he will be killed!"

And Victor covered his eyes with his hands as the great, snorting locomotive, with its fiery eye, flashed round a corner.

Bella fell on her knees in the cold snow with her clasped hands raised to the starry heavens above; but Fred was already at the foot of the hill, speeding, like the wind, towards his fellow creature in deadly peril.

The hot breath of the merciless monster half-choked him as he dragged the unconscious boy almost from under it; but they were both safe and, except for the gash in Fred's cheek, uninjured.

He lifted the child in his arms and carried him to where the others hurried to meet him.

Bella took the little fellow in her strong young arms.

"Is he hurt?" she gasped, for she was quivering like an aspen, but held her burden with nervous force.

"I do not think so—at least not by the train," said Fred. "This wound on his temple is the cause of his unconsciousness. See!" holding up a pair of skates, "he is some little chap who was going to skate, and racing down the hill and over the level crossing, he tripped, striking his head upon the rail. He is only stunned; but if Mr. Raymond will carry him to the vicarage, I will hasten for Dr. Clark."

But Victor, conscious that he had not cut a very good figure, and was anxious to get away, said he would call for the doctor, and departed, quickly on his errand.

Fred turned to relieve Bella of her burden, and as he bent to take the boy, a drop of blood from his cheek fell upon the back of her gloveless hand.

She became deathly white, and tottered as if about to fall, but rallying again, walked quietly by his side, without uttering a word.

The little fellow, who already showed signs of returning animation, was put to bed; and the physicians coming in almost immediately, he was soon sufficiently restored to give an account of himself.

Bella remained up stairs while Dr. Clark attended to Fred's hurt; but as soon as he had gone she came down to the room where Fred sat, a little giddy, but not otherwise damaged; and throwing her arms around his neck, burst into a passion of tears upon his shoulder.

"Dearest, what is it?" he said, anxiously.

"Oh, my dear, brave Fred!—how can you speak to me, or touch me? Why don't you despise such a silly, stupid, miserable goose of a girl?"

"But why? What have you done?"

"What have I done? Why, I c-c-alled you an ef-f-eminate man—you!"

Fred gave a ringing laugh.

"Oh, my dear girl, but we are quits, for did not I call you a masculine woman?—you, who are now threatening to drown yourself in a deluge of the most feminine tears, which I must straightway proceed to kiss away!"

Whereupon Bella was happier than ever before in her life, and forgot from that moment all about her yearnings for a romantic sorrow.

THE BUILDING BOOM.

The Town Growing Steadily.

Operations of the Year.

During the past year building operations have been energetically prosecuted by a number of property owners, and the various contractors and builders have been kept actively at work all summer, and are even now many of them engaged in putting up houses, and making improvements to those already existing. The following is a partial list of what has been done, and will be followed to-day and Saturday by a further description of building operations.

HUNTER STREET.

The fine residence, erected by Mr. Geo. A. Cox on this street, now occupied by Mr. J. H. Roper, of the Bank of Toronto, though built last year was finished this. It is one of the most complete and well-finished residences in town. It is three stories in height, built of white brick with graphite pointings, and the elegant mansard roof is covered with figured slate. Commodious balconies and verandahs add to the outside comfort. Inside wide, roomy halls communicate on each floor with the several rooms. On the first floor are a drawing room, parlor and dining room. These are superbly finished, the ceiling and cornices especially, with elaborately beautiful stucco mouldings. All these have marble mantle open fire-places. On this floor also are the kitchen and pertaining offices, such as pantries, china closets, etc. Underneath the kitchen in the basement is the laundry with stationary tubs and hot and cold water service. The second floor, contain four bed chambers, dressing room and five closets and bath rooms. Three of the bedrooms are furnished with stationary marble-top wash bowls. The third floor contains a like number of rooms. All the windows are provided with inside folding Venetian blinds. The house is heated throughout with hot water, lighted with gas, and served with city water. The cellerage is exceptionally excellent, and indeed, the finishing of the residence throughout is of the highest character, and with its improved appointments, makes it a model residence. It was built from designs furnised by Mr. Thomas Hanley, Belleville, and Mr. John W. Alfred was the contractor and builder. The estimated cost of the entire structure with its appendages and offices is about $10,000, of which sum, about $5,000 was expended this year, and should be credited to this season's operations.

Mr. R. A. Morrow has erected on this street, for the Waterworks Company, new offices, workshops, store-rooms, etc., under the superintendence of Mr. John Webber. The main building is of wood, 40x24, and contains in front the general office, and in rear of that the board room. These rooms are neatly finished inside with a wainscot of oiled V-jointed pine. A building 24x30 has been put up in rear of the former, for a store room, etc. The total cost was about $500.

LONDON STREET.

Mr. Thomas McKee has had built for him, by Mr. J. W. Alford, a white brick two-story tenement cottage. It is 30x30 feet in area and contains on the first floor hall and three rooms, on the second four rooms. Ample cellarage, cistern, etc. Mr. Adam Dawson did the brickwork. Cost, $1,500.

RUBIDGE STREET.

On this street, corner of Sherbrooke, a red brick two story store and dwelling have been erected for Mr. John Kelly, superintendent of Little Lake Cemetery, by Mr. J. W. Alford. The store is 18x36, and the residence wing 22x22. On the first floor are parlour, dining room and kitchen; on the second floor six bedrooms, closets, etc. The brickwork, which is a very neat job, was done by Mr. Ed. Webb. Cost, $1,600.

DONEGAL STREET.

Mr. J. Carlisle has put up on his own account a tenement residence in red brick, two stories in height, with verandah and octagon front, seven rooms and two halls, cellarage complete, with well and cistern, etc. J. Carlisle builder throughout. Cost, $2,200.

BROCK STREET.

Mr. John Carlisle, a most irrepressible builder, who is a corperative building society in himself, he, furnishing his own plans and doing all his own work, has erected this year eleven houses. On this street he has erected this year a white brick two story tenement residence, size 32 x 37, with octagon front, verandeh and balcony. House contains seven rooms and closets, and two large halls, from which the house can be thoroughly and economically heated. The front yard is neatly scolded and tsnaced; cost $2,200.

Mr. Carlisle has also put up another house in red brick, which is, in all other respects, the counterpart of the one described above; cost $2,200.

Police Court.

Two boys named F. VanNorman and J McCullough were before the magistrate this morning on a charge of breaking windows in the drill shed. The case was adjourned till Monday.

Two cases of illegal liquor selling, preferred against L. Fobert, were also enlarged.

Information Wanted.

With reference to the paragraph under this heading in yesterday's issue it appears the girl alluded to is in active service here and has written home several times. Her letters must have miscarried. Mr. May has no connection with the matter, other than kindly securing a situation for her.

Rescued from Drowning.

A small boy named Moore, whose parents live on Aylmer street, yesterday fell into a well more than ten feet deep, and would have been drowned but for the gallant action of a painter who fortunately happened to see him. He at once went down after the youngster and succeeded in fishing him out, wet and weeping, but not much the worse of his ducking.

Highly Delighted.

The Norwood Register delights to speak the truth, and does so as follows:—"Last week we received from the Peterborough EXAMINER book-bindery "Picturesque Canada" bound in two volumes, and must say we are highly delighted with the manner in which the work is performed. It is bound in half morocco, with gilt edges, and presents a really superb appearance. Some incredulous persons would hardly believe us when we told them the work was done in Peterborough, but insisted that it must have been done in Toronto. Parties having "Picturesque Canada" to bind would do well to call at this office and inspect the work, when orders will be taken and promptly and satisfactorily filled.

The George-street Church Entertainment.

A very pleasant entertainment under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of George Street Methodist Church, was held last evening in the basement of that church. The programme consisted of songs, recitations, duets, &c., by a number of ladies and gentlemen, who acquitted themselves in a highly creditable manner, and Kindergarten and finger exercises by a number of the little ones, which was beyond all doubt the most pleasing and amusing of the many pleasant features of the entertainment. Another feature was the intermission, or rather intermissions, for there were two of them, during which a general hob-nobbing, so to speak, went on among the large audience, who put themselves on the best of terms with each other, and took good care to make the stranger within their gates feel perfectly at home. It is pleasant to know that such a well conceived and carried out entertainment was a complete success in every respect.

Scott Act Record.

A meeting was held before the Country Judge yesterday, in reference to the recent alleged irregularities in conducting the Scott Act voting. Some evidence was taken in regard to the matter, and an adjournment was made till next Thursday, when the remainder of the evidence will be heard. So far as this evidence is concerned, the judges will report facts, but his jurisdiction in the matter is confined to a recount of the ballots. The question has been lately raised in connection with the Scott Act in St. Thomas, where the County Judge held, he had no jurisdiction beyond a recount, and an appeal from his ruling being taken before Judge Rose, the latter sustained him.

SALE OF FARM LAND

In the Township of Otonabee,

within six miles of the Town of Peterborough

Under and by virtue of a judgment of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, and in the Chancery Division thereof, made in the action of HARTLEY et al., vs. BEAVIS et al., and dated the Fourth day of September, A.D., 1885, there will be offered for sale, with the approval of the Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Peterborough, at his Chambers, in the said Town of Peterborough on

Saturday, 7th day of Nov'r, 1885

at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon, the following valuable farm property viz:—

The West Half of Lot Number 20, in the 10th Concession of the said Township of Otonabee.

containing one hundred acres more or less.

Upon the said property there are about 25 acres of hardwood land, the remainder thereof being cleared and under cultivation.

There are upon the said premises two barns and a log dwelling house, with woodshed attached, and a never-failing well. One of said barns is frame, 40 feet x 30 feet; the other a post barn, 50 feet x 37 feet; the said dwelling house is 30 feet x 20 feet. The soil is clay or clay loam, and well adapted for raising wheat and other grains, and the property is situated in a first-class farming locality, within six miles of the Town of Peterborough.

The said premises will be sold subject to a lease thereof to Samuel Heatherly and John Heatherly, the Lessees therein mentioned, which has one year to run from 1st March, 1886, at a yearly rental of $180.00 per annum, and which said list contains a provision that the purchaser of said premises may determine the said lease upon giving to the Lessees one month's notice in writing, and paying to said Lessees the value of any crops then upon said premises, and whatever ploughing he may have done on said premises; and a reasonable sum to pay the expenses of removal from said premises. Said lands shall also be sold subject to the condition that the current year's rent, due upon the 23th Feb'y, 1886, shall be paid to the new owners of said lands.

TERMS:

Ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Vendor's Solicitors at the time of the sale, and the balance of the purchase money within 30 days thereafter without interest.

Other terms and conditions will be the standing conditions of the Court.

For other terms and particulars, apply gratis to Messrs. Hatton & Wood, Barristers, Peterborough, or E. A. Peck, Esquire, Barrister, Peterborough.

Public Lecture.

Arrangements have been made with Rev. Dr. Wild, of Bond street church, Toronto, to deliver a public lecture in Bradburn's Opera House, on Wednesday evening, October 28th. The subject will be "A Masonic Miracle." The eloquent doctor, it is probable, will, in his usual racy and eloquent manner, give his auditors who are outside the pale, some startling glimpses of the "true inwardness" of Masonry. Fuller particulars hereafter.

Lindsay and Davy Crockett.

Lindsay's Company made their first appearance at Bradburn's Opera House last evening in "Davy Crockett," which was presented to a very good audience. The play is a most intersting one, and entirely free from the objectionable features common to so many plays nowadays. The various parts were all well taken, Mr. Lindsay in the title role acquitted himself admirably, while Mr. Barry Harvey as Oscar Crampton also won favorable opinions. Mrs. Barry Harvey, Miss Spence and Miss Bernard in their respective parts also gave a creditable performance. To-night "Cast on the World" and farce Betsy Baker.

THE BUILDING BOOM.

The Town Growing Steadily.

Operations of the Year.

During the past year building operations have been energetically prosecuted by a number of property owners, and the various contractors and builders have been kept actively at work all summer, and are even now many of them engaged in putting up houses, and making improvements to those already existing. The following is a partial list of what has been done, and will be followed hereafter by a further description of building operations.

GEORGE STREET.

On the northern part of this street there has been a large amount of building done, in which Mr. H. C. Stabler has had a chief hand. To show how the excellence of his work begets public confidence and procures him contracts for first-class buildings, it may be stated that he has, this year, built under contract fifteen dwellings, of which all but one, a country residence, are in town.

On this street Mr. W. McIlwain has had erected a two-story red brick residence, 23x30, containing on the first floor, a hall and three rooms, with kitchen wing one story, 14x16. On the second floor are four bedrooms and hall. Contractor, Mr. H. C. Stabler; brickwork, Mr. J. J. Hartley; plastering, Mr. Robert Pollock. Cost, $1,200.

Mr. H. C. Stabler has erected for himself a two-story red brick residence, 26x30; first floor, hall and three rooms, and kitchen and pantry; second floor, hall and four rooms. Mr. Hartly, brickwork; Robert Pollock, plastering. Cost, including stables and sheds, $1,600.

A seven-room two-story brick house has been completed by Mr. Langford at a cost of $1,500.

He also furnished last spring a story and a half roughcast house with six rooms at a cost of $600. Both were erected by job work under his own supervision.

Mr. Stabler is erecting for rental two fine two-story white brick tenement houses, 29½x34. Hall and and four rooms below, upstairs, four bedrooms with closets. Brickwork, J. J. Hartly; plastering, Robert Pollock. Cost, $1,700 each, or $3,400.

Mr. T. McKee is putting up on George street two tenement residences, 29½x34. Hall and four rooms on first floor; four rooms and closets on second floor. Mr. Clement Gordon does the brickwork, and Mr. R Clinkscale the carpentering. Cost, $1,700 each, or $3,400.

SHERIDAN STREET.

Mr. George Hutchinson entrusted to Mr. H. C. Stabler a two-story red brick residence, 23x40, with sheds, etc. First floor, hall, three rooms, pantry, etc.; second floor, hall and five rooms with closets. Mr. Hartly, brickwork; Mr. Whitehair, plastering. Cost, $1,400.

LONDON STREET.

Mr. T. W. McKee has had built for him on this street a two-story white brick tenement residence, 29½x30, containing on the ground floor, hall and three rooms, on the second floor, hall and four bedrooms, with closets. Mr. H. C. Stabler, contractor; brickwork, Mr. J. J. Hartley; plastering, Mr. R. Pollock. Cost, $1,600.

Mr. W. Fitzgerald, contractor, has put up for Mr. T. McKee, a building on this street, in all respects similar to the above. Mr. J. J. Hartley, brickwork; Mr. J. Johnston, plastering. Cost, $1,600.

George McWilliams has had built for him by Mr. H. C. Stabler a two-story red brick residence, 20x20; below two rooms and hall, and above four rooms and closets. Mr. Hartley, brickwork; Mr. R. Pollock, plastering. Cost, $800.

STEWART STREET.

Mr. John Kay has had built a two story red brick residence, 24 x 30, kitchen wing 14 21; first floor, hall and three rooms, second, hall and four rooms. Mr. H. C. Stabler, contractor; Mr. Hartly and Mr. Pollock, brick work and plastering respectively.—Cost $1,200.

WATER STREET.

Laying the Corner Stone.

The foundation stone of St. Luke's School Room, Ashburnham, will be laid with appropriate ceremonies, on Thursday next, the 22nd of October, at 3 o'clock. A special service will be held the same evening at 7:30, when an interesting and appropriate sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Roy, of Cobourg. The general public are cordially invited on both occasions. The offertory will be in aid of the building fund.

A Faithless Wife

Nelson Hubert, of Cohoes, New York, is in town looking for a man named Louis Smith, alias Collard, alias Fabre, who, Hubert claimes, has eloped with his wife and household furniture. It seems that Hubert and his wife lived at Cohoes and that Smith boarded with them for some time. Hubert was about removing to Glen's Falls, and shipped his effects on there, his wife accompanying them, while he remained at Cohoes to settle up his business. Smith took advantage of this to induce Mrs. Hubert to elope with him, and they did so, taking Hubert's Lares and Penates with them. They appear to have stayed over at Troy, where a sister of Mr. Hubert's became aware of their movements and apprised Hubert. He came on to Troy and found the pair had fled, and inquiry at the depot revealed that the furniture had been sent to Lindsay, Ont. Hubert followed them there and learned that the elopers had come to Peterborough, and at once followed them. On arriving here he discovered his goods at the G. T. R. station and saw both his wife and Smith in different parts of the town. He applied for Smith's arrest this morning, but it is thought that worthy and Mrs. Hubert have left for Toronto. Word has been sent there to have him arrested if seen.

West Huntington.

A sad and fatal accident occurred near West Huntingdon on Monday, the particulars of which have just reached this city. On the day mentioned Mr. Allen Kellar, a well-to-do farmer of Huntingdon township, went to a farm of his in the neighborhood of the one he lives upon for the purpose of hauling in some buckwheat which was in the field. His wife accompanied him. On the return trip both the farmer and his wife were on the load. In passing along the road the wheels on one side got out of the roadway and an upset resulted. In the fall Mrs. Keller's neck was broken, causing instant death. The unfortunate accident was much regretted in the neighborhood to which Mrs. Kellar belonged, as she was highly esteemed. Her remains were followed to their last resting place on Wednesday by a large gathering of friends.—Intelligencer.

Norwood.

The many friends of Mr. J. Davidson, Principal of the High School, will learn with pleasure that he is rapidly recovering from his recent illness and will soon be in a position to resume his scholastic duties. In the meantime the Rev. J. Carmichael, pastor of the Presbyterian Church here, is filling the position.

As the 6 o'clock express was pulling into the station here on Tuesday evening last some of the coaches were badly damaged by striking the van of a freight train which was standing on a siding and had not been pulled quite clear of the main line. The windows and wood-work of several of the coaches was badly damaged, but the train was not derailed and none of the passengers were injured.—Register.

Young's Point.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. Chas. Wynne is building several piers above the dam for holding booms to divide the channel so that the logs may not interfere with the traffic of the steamers. Last fall piers were sunk at intervals between here and Lakefield, but no booms have been put on yet. This season the steamers have been delayed several times by logs, which is a great inconvenience and loss to the owners. The Government authorities should see that the booms are put on before the logs commence to come down next spring.

Over 125 men are now working on the T. V. C. works at Burleigh Falls.

Prof. Geo. Scrimager, of Lakefield, will shortly open an assembly dancing school here.

Trenton.

On Thursday afternoon three tramps entered the dwelling of Mrs. J. Weaver on the bay shore at Trenton, and stole therefrom a double case gold watch, a gold rimmed broach, with braided hair in the centre, and a larger gold broach in the shape of three links, with a red stone in the centre. One of the three men was dressed in dark clothes, with rubbers on his feet, another wore a dark coat with light pants, and the third wore a light suit. The men had left town before the theft was reported to the police. This morn-Chief Hinde telephoned to the police at Belleville to have them arrested if they came this way and Chief of Police McKinnon arrested a young man who gave his name as Robert Fanston, of Orillia.—Intelligencer.

CORNERING THE CHIEFTAIN.

Sir John Macdonald is easily first in the role of political wriggler, but his quondam friends are preparing a little corner for the crafty Chieftain, that will either collapse him or cause him to come out in a grand contortion act that will put to shame any previous performance. He is to be brought to bay on the Orange incorporation question, if we are to trust to the programme laid down by Mr. S. W. Davy, P.C.M., of Murvale, Frontenac county, who, in a letter to the Orange Sentinel, appeals to Orangemen to withdraw their support from Sir John Macdonald unless he grants their incorporation. Mr. Davie in the letter referred to proposes as follows:—

"First, that no man who holds office under government shall be eligible for office in the Order; second that no Orangeman vote at elections for any candidate of any party who will not pledge himself to vote for Orange incorporation; and third, that they put forward their strength in at least twelve counties where Orangemen are strong, twelve tried independent Orange candidates who shall be firmly pledged to vote on every occasion against any and every government which will not agree to grant Orange incorporation, and to make it a Ministerial measure by which they elect to stand or fall. Do this and within twelve months, he says, you will obtain your end or the men who deceived you will have met their fitting doom. Neglect to do this and you need never cherish the fond illusion that Britons and Orangemen never will be slaves. Neglect to do this and every French member of Parliament will be justified in believing what many of them say openly, that is, that we Orangemen do make a great noise and do crow very loud when nobody is by, but that we have never dared to show our noses in the streets of Montreal since Sir John came into power, and that if we did we would be chased home again very quick, now that there is no Mackenzie to order out the volunteers to protect us."

LIVE STOCK OUTLOOK.

The changing conditions that affect agricultural operations, the uncertainty from climatic influences and insect and other pests that affect the staple cereal crops and the exhaustion of soil that follows upon overcropping, from a desire to make haste to be rich or to lift the mortgage, makes the question of stock raising an important one to the farmer directly; and indirectly to every other class. Therefore, the following deliverance on the subject from the Canadian Live Stock Journal, an excellent authority on stock raising matters, will be read with interest:—While we must admit that butcher's meat has fallen in price, it has not fallen in proportion with products A few years ago wheat averaged from $1 to $1.25 per bushel, and now it averages from seventy to eighty cents per bushel. Most other other kinds of grain have fallen proportionately, while beef has not fallen more than 20 per cent. That meat should maintain its price when all other products of the farm were at a discount is not to be desired. It would be an anomalous state of things which could not fail to work mischief, and then without a doubt a time would come when we would have too much meat. Every stockman should be satisfied if the drop in the price of meat is less proportionately than that in other farm products, and thus it has been up to the present. That the price of meat will maintain this vantage ground for the stockmen for a long time to come we fully believe, as meat is a staple, and with the developing of our cities and towns the demand for it is likely to increase in a more marked ratio than the supply. It should be borne in mind by all producers of stock that when the price is lower, it is of the uttermost importance to produce what is prime in quality. It is at such times that inferior meat will be sold at a loss, while the prime article always brings a fair price.

Dairy products have fallen considerably, but it should not be forgotten that up till this season the prices have for some years been—we had almost said—abnormally high, which makes the present drop appear somewhat greater than it really is. If the returns of the dairyman at the close of the season be compared with those in other lines of farming, the dairyman will still have occasion to feel proud of his position. If in her season of agricultural distress Britain is urging upon her farmers to become dairymen, as a means of relief, our dairymen surely cannot go astray if they stick to the ship.

Disestablishment in Wales.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 14.—At the Welsh Liberal conference yesterday, letters were read from Mr. John Bright and Mr. Chamberlain, in which they said the time was ripe for the disestablishment of the Welsh church. Mr. Bright added that the coming parliament must complete a thorough land reform which to Wales was a most important question.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Northwest, remarks the Welland Tribune, is a great country, and all its products are on a mammoth scale. Even its blue ribbon beer contains seven per cent. of alcohol.

There are good grounds for belief that the Government intends to dissolve the House of Commons immediately after the next session. The revising barristers are now being appointed, and they will soon be at work on the voters' lists. As it is almost certain these first lists will be used at the election, the electors should see that their names are properly enrolled.

Present indications are that the imperial elections will be all over by the end of November. The new parliament will meet in the first week of December to be sworn in and will then adjourn till February. Parliament has only met three times before during Queen Victoria's reign in December—it met in 1854, 1857, and 1868. It sat once, however, and only once in the month of December. That was when it met in urgency to carry the rules of procedure or cloture!

Baker Pasha and the Women.

The social topic of greatest interest just now appears to be the proposed reinstatement of Baker Pasha in the military position which he forfeited some years ago. The Standard, it seems, received no less than two hundred letters from ladies recently urging that the erring officer should be forgiven. Forgiveness being with many women the heroic virtue, this is not very surprising; but have these ladies no fear that in their impulsive generosity they may be helping to break down the barriers which society, not too careful as a rule of female honor, has placed about the sex to protect them from the foulest wrong? "It is only a momentary impulse," they say, but is that any reason for relaxing the penalty which tends to keep these momentary impulses in check? Suppose the victim had been less courageous, the yielding to that impulse would have entailed a term of penal servitude, and that, too, we suppose, might have been remitted on the same grounds.

"I am mightily amused," writes to us a graceless reprobate, "at the announcement in the Standard this morning that the editor has been deluged with letters from hundreds of ladies impetuously demanding the reinstatement of a certain gallant officer in the British army. They are all unanimous, it seems, not one dissentient voice among the whole two hundred. It brought to my mind the familiar couplet of Pope:

Men, some to business, some to pleasure, take,
But every woman is at heart——

Let those finish the quotation who will.

Louise Michel has, like Prince Kropotkin, been beguiling the monotony of captivity with literary pursuits. A little volume of hers has just been given to the world. It is of the most inoffensive character, the prison regulations not affording her, it may be, facilities for airing her anarchical crotchets. Louise has devoted her leisure to a study of the songs and stories of an Indian tribe, and the title of her book is "Legendes et Chants de Geste des Canaques." The book is written in a pure and simple style, and is a creditable literary performance.

A LEAP-YEAR EPISODE.

"I wouldn't marry John Marryatt, not for a thousand pounds!" said Avice Mere.

And she said it, too, exactly as if she meant it, with reddened cheeks, eyes full of hazel fire, and two small dimpled fists clenched tightly.

"My dear," said Penelope Paxton, one of those jovial old maids who are privileged to say anything, "You remind me of a famous historical character."

"If" said Avice, momentarily off her guard.

"Yes," said Penelope. "'Miss Betty Baxter, who refused Captain Jones before he axed her!'"

"Oh, it isn't that!" protested Avice, rosier than ever. "Of course Mr. Marryatt has no idea of asking me; why should he have? And if he did, I shouldn't accept him."

"'Miss Betty Baxter,'" monotonously chanted Penelope, "'who refused—'"

"Penny, do be quiet!" said Avice, stamping her foot in genuine annoyance. "You know what I mean!"

"No, I don't," said Penny. "And I don't believe you know yourself."

"He said it was Leap Year," pleaded indignant Avice.

"So it is," said Penny. "Get the [illegible] for yourself. Four into eighteen hundred and eighty-four goes——"

"Penelope, can't you talk commonsense?"

"To be sure I can, if you will set me the example!" gravely responded Miss Paxton.

"And he told Dr. Darien he wasn't coming to our party to-morrow night, because he didn't want to be married against his will."

"Well, after all, there's something in that," said Penelope reflectively. "I never was a man myself; but I can imagine that, under such circumstances, a cold shiver would go all through me."

"Penny," said Avice solemnly, "do you really, seriously think that one of us girls ever thought of marrying John Marryatt?"

"That is a question which I am not prepared to answer," said Miss Paxton.

And Avice ran out of the room, and was surprised to find herself crying over the clove-scented blossoms of her favorite carnations, in the bath-room window.

"I'm sure I don't know why," sobbed she, "I hate John Marryatt; and I think it was horrid of Dr. Darien to go and repeat what was said to him in confidence! And if John Marryatt really believed that—that—— There, I won't think about it any more!"

"Leap Year, indeed! Why do people talk such a string of nonsense because the month of February happens to have twenty-nine days in it, instead of twenty-eight, P"

In the meantime, Mr. Marryatt had packed his valise and gone off to visit an old uncle who was at the point of death.

"It won't be a very cheerful visit," said he to himself, "but it will be better than a state of siege—for I have been told, on good authority, that every one of those girls means to get engaged at the Leap-Year party.

"It will be the old story of the Sabines over again, with the sexes reversed. And when I marry—if I marry—I intend to have at least the privilege of choice. So I'll just go up to Uncle Origen's."

Uncle Origen's farm-house was on the top of a bleak hill, where a few dwarfed cherry trees shook and shuddered in the wintry blasts, and the cows huddled in the shelter of the hayricks to keep from being blown away.

"I think we're going to have a storm," said Mr. Marryatt. "I'm quite certain that I smell snow in the air. And there are more cheerful places during a north-east wind than Uncle Origen's house!"

In fact he was almost disposed to be sorry that he had come, when he stood there, knocking and thumping with the handle of his umbrella at the shrunken panels of the front door.

Pretty soon, a crooked old man, with his garments fastened with tow strings instead of buttons, came shuffling to the door, and peeped suspiciously around it.

"Eh?" said he, with one hand back of his poor old purple ear. "'Pears to me I heard somebody knocking, didn't I?"

"Yes, it's me," said our hero—"John Marryatt, don't you know?"

"Married?" squeaked the old man. "To whom?"

"John—Mar—ry—att!" distinctly repeated the visitor. "How is my Uncle Origen?"

The crooked old man sheltered his candle-flame with one hand, and stared as if he were gradually being transformed into one huge eye.

"Land sakes alive!" said he. "Didn't you know? He was buried yesterday!"

Here was a cheerful welcome for a city visitor!

"But what can I do?" said Marryatt, with a helpless gaze down the darkening hill-side. "I came to visit him. I had not heard——"

"Walk in, walk in!" said the old man, holding the flaring candle high above his head, and flattening himself against the whitewashed wall. "It's pretty lonesome here; but there's the deceased's chamber you can sleep in, and I trapped a rabbit in the pine-wood this morning that Isabella's just stewing up, and——"

"Isabella?" repeated John Marryatt.

"She's the old woman in charge—my sister," explained the ancient warder of the castle. "Ain't much to look at, but a proper good cook."

"But," said Mr. Marryatt, "I don't think I care about sleeping in the room where—Uncle Origen died!"

The old man stared at him with dull glassy eyes.

"Eh?" said he. "Why not? You don't b'lieve in sperritoocalism, do you?"

"Nonsense!" cried Marryatt.

"Then why ain't one room as good as another?" asked the old man stolidly.

"Nevertheless, I would prefer to go on to the nearest hotel," impatiently uttered John.

"Ain't none short o' seven miles," said the old man. "And that's only a summer machine. They don't run it after the water-falls fris up. But there is a freight train, with a passenger caboose hitched on, that stops at Cutting Corners at midnight."

"Where is Cutting Corners?"

"Eight miles away."

"And how the dickens do you suppose I am to get eight miles from here, when it is pitch dark already?" cried Marryatt with not unnatural irritation.

"There's Jenkins' one-hoss wagon," mildly suggested the old man. "I'm goin' to Jenkins' d'rectly, arter a box o' stove-blackin', a pacund o' tallor dips, and a quarter of a pacund o' green tea for Isabella. I can tell Jenkins to come round and cart ye to the station, of ye don't grudge a crown."

"By all means," said Mr. Marryatt hurriedly. "And while you are gone, Isabella, as you call her, can give me some supper."

He sat down in the old low-ceiled room, where the rag-carpet seemed neither brighter nor dimmer than it had done twenty years ago, and warmed his chilled feet before a blaze of snapping logs; while old Isabella, who might have appeared creditably at any tableau as the "Witch of Endor," crept around an iron pot which swung from a prodigious crane, and got supper, after a slow and inefficient manner.

"Pretty gay in town this winter?" said old Isabella, brandishing her spoon over him, in the manner of an incantation, as she watched him eat the rabbit-stew, after it was dished.

"I suppose so."

"I'm a-thinkin' of goin' there myself," said Isabella, mumbling her toothless jaws.

"To take a situation?" asked Marryatt, inwardly thinking that he could not conscientiously give her a recommendation as cook.

"Bless your 'art, no!" said Isabella. "I know a sea-captain there as ain't married; and they tell me the gals is all pickin' and choosin' for themselves, now that Leap Year has come round. Anyhow, I'm tired o' this place, and I don't see why my chance ain't as good as another's."

Mr. Marryatt stared at her in mute amazement, while he secretly deplored the sad case of the unsuspecting sea-captain.

"P'raps you wouldn't mind keepin' a heye on the fire," said the gentle Isabella, "while I jest go over and look to see if Simon has locked the hen-house. Simon's dreadful forgetful."

And she hobbled away.

At the same moment there came a loud and emphatic knocking at the outer door, and a stout country girl, with cheeks of that peculiar red which shines as if it had been varnished, very black eyes, and coarse black hair, walked in, well wrapped up in a red-and-green plaid shawl, and a fearful felt hat, which looked like a damaged helmet.

"I've come for Mr. Marryatt," said she, without any ceremony or introduction.

Instinctively our hero backed against the wall.

"What!" cried he.

"You're Mr. Marryatt, ain't you?" said she.

"That's my name," retreating still farther behind the stiff wooden-backed chair, where Uncle Origen used to sit and smoke his pipe.

"Well, I'm come for you. You ain't deaf, be you? I'm—come—for—you!"

"Yes; but I—I——"

"There ain't no time to lose," bawled this daughter of the solitudes, seizing him by the arm. "This here's your baggage?" grasping the valise in the other hand.

This was Leap Year with a vengeance, thought our perspiring hero.

With one desperate struggle he freed himself.

"I won't go!" said he. "Nothing can compel me to, against my will."

"You won't?" said the red-cheeked damsel.

"No, I won't," said Mr. John Marryatt.

"Then you will miss the train, as sure as serpents!" said the red-cheeked damsel. "And it won't be no fault of mine. Father has had the rheumatics, and I promised him I would come for you."

"Oh, the train—I see," cried Mr. Marryatt. "I didn't quite comprehend your meaning at first. Yes, I'll come immediately."

And the red-cheeked damsel, who proved to be no despicable charioteer, rattled down the frozen mountain-road, with considerable skill and energy, reaching the solitary station just as the freight train came in sight around a curve.

So, Mr. Marryatt arrived in t just in time to see the sunrise gli. irradiate the red-brick chimney pots behind the Delavin House.

"Not married yet," he said to himself; "but I will be as soon as possible, if she will have me. I'll run no more such risks as this!"

That very afternoon he called at Dr. Mere's house and proposed to Avice—and Avice accepted him. Yes, she actually accepted him!

"But did you really say that," asked Avice, feeling it her duty to admonish her swain a little—"that—that you didn't want to be married against your will?"

"Of course I said it," answered Marryatt, "and meant it. I don't intend to be married against my will; I intend to be married with it. And did you really say you wouldn't marry John Marryatt for a thousand pounds?"

"And I wouldn't!" cried Avice, looking up with sparkling eyes. "Not for twice that money; but—but just because I love him!"

So they both were happy, and laughed heartily over the adventures at Uncle Origen's house.

And when Penelope Paxton next saw the bride-elect, she chuckled and said: "So it isn't to be a case of 'Miss Betty Baxter,' after all!"

And Avice colored and said "she didn't know what Miss Penny could possibly mean."

Cackle, Cackle.

Sixty thousand eggs sounds big, but Messrs. Scott and Scrimgeour are making preparations to send that number to Boston, Mass., in a single consignment, on Monday next, which will make no less than 250,000 dozen shipped there by them this season. If all the cackling that was done over those eggs could be concentrated, what a concert it would make.

"Eureka,"

that great Hair Destroyer, will be on sale by Prof. Dorenwend, at Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 26, 27 and 28. This wonderful preparation will remove all superfluous hair from the face or arms of either ladies or gentlemen without pain or disfigurement. Price $2 per bottle or three bottles for $5. Don't let your face be disfigured for the sake of $2.

How They Did It.

"No Sir," said old Mr. Gatherdross, as he showed young Scatterpenny down the steps of his fine residence on Hunter Street some time ago, "I can't allow my daughter to marry a young man who hasn't even got a home to take her to, and with your limited income sir, I think it will be a long time before you can provide one fit for my daughter to live in." And drawing himself to his full height, swelling with pompous pride, the old gent slammed the door on his would be son-in-law.

But it wasn't long before Master Fred Scatterpenny and the fair Ethel Gatherdross met at a meeting of the Philharmonic Society, and on their way home both made up their minds that it was too shameful altogether, and that they would get married whether the old gentleman liked it or not.

Fred, in spite of his occasional game of billiards and small sums squanderd in cigars, was not, as might be inferred from his name, a spendthrift, and had quite a snug little deposit of his own stored away in a certain monetary institution on Water Street; so one evening when Mr. Gatherdross came home from business, he found his fair daughter gone and a delicately scented little note awaiting him on the table, announcing that "Dear Fred and I were married this morning, and are now on our wedding tour to Toronto and the west, and I hope, dear papa, you will forgive us."

The old gent fretted and fumed, but as he could not help himself, and was really a good old soul at heart, forgave the young couple, and about three weeks after, when they returned and settled down in a snug little cottage on Aylmer street, he was very glad to accept an invitation to take tea with them. On arriving at their cottage home Mr. Gatherdross was agreeably surprised to find how cosy and pleasant it looked, and when his daughter, radiant with smiles, opened the door and ushered him into the neatest little parlor imaginable, the last little bit of resentment forsook his fatherly bosom, and both she and Fred knew they were forgiven.

Everything in the house was new, and bright, and comfortable, and the old gentleman could not understand how they had managed so well; so, while he sipped the fragrant hyson, served up to him in delicate china, he could not refrain from asking how Fred, with his limited means, could have furnished the house so completely.

"Well, papa," said the fair Ethel, "we really could not have done it, you know, only Mr. Belleghem, the furniture dealer, on Hunter street, sells so cheap, you would never believe it; why, it only cost us $300 to fit the whole house out, did it, Fred, dear?"

Fred lovingly acquiesced, and the old gentleman made up his mind that when he re-furnished the Hunter street mansion Belleghem should get the contract; and he will, too, sure enough.

Market Notes.

The market this morning was pretty lively and lots of produce of various kinds was offered. Eggs brought 14c.; butter, 20c.; geese 65c. each, and chickens 45c. per pair. Large quantities of apples were being offered at from 60 to 90c. per bag, and potatoes at from fifty to sixty cents. Hay was selling at $12 per ton, and wheat at 90c. per bushel.

Gross Carelessness.

Some stupid individual last evening threw some ashes from a coal stove on a pile of straw and manure in a shed on Chambers street, and in a very short time the making of a lively fire was under way. Fortunately a couple of members of the fire brigade happened along, and with the keen scent for fire that all the boys possess, smelt it out, and soon extinguished it. Had it not been for their timely appearance, the brigade might have had another opportunity of testing the quality of their hose.

Sale of Household Goods.

Mr. C. Young, of Ashburnham, having disposed of his hotel and being about to leave town, is offering for sale the whole of his household furniture, the contents of 15 bedrooms, parlors, bar, kitchen, pantries, &c. The furniture comprises parlour sets and dining room tables, chairs, sideboards silverware and glass, coal stoves, beds and bedding, washstands and toilet sets, refrigerator, bar fixtures and other articles innumerable. This sale will afford an excellent opportunity for procuring bargains in furniture, &c. The sale will take place on Tuesday, Oct. 20th.

Prof. Dorenwend is Coming.

It will be seen in another column that the great hair goods artist, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, will be in Peterborough at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 26th, 27th and 28th. He will have with with him a large stock of his excellent goods, such as Langtry, Parisian and Pompadour bangs, water waves, switches, ladies' wigs, gents' wigs and Toupees, &c. All who are in need of something neat, becoming and stylish in this line, should not fail to visit him and see his magnificent stock. It is a well-known fact that he is the leading hair goods manufacturer of Canada, and spares no labor and expense in being up to the times, and giving satisfaction to his customers and patrons. Remember he will be here for three days only at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26th, 27th and 28th.

Call at Hall, Innes & Co's., and leave your order for an Uncrushable Plush Mantle, in Black or Seal Brown. These are the LATEST NOVELTY in the London Market.

Business Wisdom.

A perfect hum in the mantle and dress making department at the "Golden Lion." Orders are going in rapidly. Mantles and dresses are being turned out with a promptness which shows that Miss Johnston with her large staff of expert hands is prepared to execute all orders with neatness and despatch. Fair, VanEvery & Co'ys. large and excellent selection of dress and mantle materials is very attractive, and giving such satisfaction this season that it is gratifying to know they have the business wisdom to provide what the people wish.

Prof. Dorenwend at Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough.

Baldness, gray hair, thin hair, dandruff, falling of the hair, &c., can all be remedied by the use of Dr. C. Dorenwend's Great German "Hair Magic," the most wonderful preparation for effectually restoring color and vitality of the hair, preventing falling, producing a heavy growth, making hair grow on bald spots, &c., ever discovered. It is unfailing in its results, as the many testimonials received daily by the sole owner and manufacturer for America, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, can testify. The Professor will be at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26, 27 and 28, and every one who wishes to try a bottle can procure it from him. The price is $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Call on him and procure a bottle.

Fannie B. Wins.

The named race was the only one of the races advertised for yesterday in which sufficient entries were made to warrant its being run off. For this J. Daly's Fannie B., McGregor's Brown Barber, Simpson's Lapidist Chief, Thompson's Indian Billy and Appleby's Nellie Bly were yesterday brought to the starting point. Messrs. H. Calcutt, Captain Stapleton and W. H. Rackham, judges, and C. Starr, timer, occupied the judges' stand. The first heat was won by Fanny B. in 2.53, she getting a slight advantage at the start, which was maintained all the way, although Indian Billy was almost neck and neck with her at the finish. The second heat also was won by Fanny B., Indian Billy second and Brown Barber third. The race was a very close one for about three-quarters of a mile, after which the horses began to draw away from each other. A collision between the sulkys of Indian Billy and Nelly Bly as they passed under the wire for the third heat caused the horses to be called back, but the Barber and Fanny B. trotted out the mile, the Barber coming in ahead. After a great deal of scoring the horses were at last got off for the third heat, Nelly Bly leading. The Cobourg mare held the lead till they neared the last turn, when Fanny B. passed and came in a clean winner. The first money, $70, went to her; second, $40, to Indian Billy; and third, $10, to McGregor's Brown Barber. There was a band on the grounds and a considerable number of spectators on the grand stand and in numerous vehicles.

A Fight to a Finish.

This morning two young blades employed in one of our new industrial establishments, undertook to settle a personal feud, after the manner of disciples of John L. Sullivan and Paddy Ryan. The two young scions of Uncle Sam without waiting to sign regular articles, fell to and pounded at each other for some time, the result of the slugging being a draw—not so much of blood as of perspiration

The regular meeting of the Dufferin Literary Society was held last evening, in the Mechanics Institute rooms, the President, Mr. J. H. Long, in the chair. After the details of future meetings, etc., had been discussed for some time and plans arranged, it was decided that the following should be the subject of the next debate to be held to Friday next: "Resolved, that all tax exemptions should be abolished." The subject is a live one, and should provoke a stirring debate.

Obituary.

The numerous friends and acquaintances of Mrs. Charles Crawford will be pained to learn of her death, which sad event took place at the family residence, Maplehurst Farm, Otonabee, on Sunday, October 11th. The deceased lady, May Drummond Lawrie, who was the wife of Mr. Charles Crawford, youngest son of the late Col. Crawford, was born in London, England, in 1826. In 1834 she came to Canada with her father, Mr. Peter Lawrie, whose third daughter she was. Mr. Lawrie settled in the vicinity of Cobourg. In 1846 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage to Mr. Charles Crawford, and settled in Smith—removing subsequently to Otonabee. Deceased has been an honored resident of this county for forty years, and was well-known and well-beloved and respected. She was a devout member of the Church of England, and her last illness, of a year's duration, borne with great patience, developed the exemplary nature of her Christian character, and her last hours were brightened with the hope that bringeth peace and gives sure promise of a happy hereafter. The funeral took place on Tuesday last, and, in spite of the inclement weather, a large concourse of sorrowing and sympathising friends showed their respect for her memory, by following her remains to their last resting place. THE EXAMINER joins the entire community in extending a most heartfelt sympathy to Mr. Crawford and family in their bereavement.

—JUDICIAL—

SALE OF FARM LAND

In the Township of Otonabee,

within six miles of the Town of Peterborough

Under and by virtue of a judgment of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, and in the Chancery Division thereof, made in the action of HARTLEY et al., vs. BEAVIS et al., and dated the Fourth day of September, A.D., 1885, there will be offered for sale, with the approval of the Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Peterborough, at his Chambers, in the said Town of Peterborough on

Saturday, 7th day of Nov'r, 1885

at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon, the following valuable farm property viz:—

The West Half of Lot Number 30, in the 16th Concession of the said Township of Otonabee.

containing one hundred acres more or less.

Upon the said property there are about 25 acres of hardwood land, the remainder thereof being cleared and under cultivation.

There are upon the said premises two barns and a log dwelling house, with woodshed attached, and a never failing well. One of said barns is frame, 40 feet x 30 feet; the other a post barn, 50 feet x 37 feet; the said dwelling house is 30 feet x 20 feet. The soil is clay or clay loam, and well adapted for raising wheat and other grains, and the property is situated in a first-class farming locality, within six miles of the Town of Peterborough.

The said premises will be sold subject to a lease thereof to Samuel Heatherly and John Heatherly, the lessees therein mentioned, which has one year to run from 1st March, 1886, at a yearly rental of $63.00 per annum, and which said lease contains a provision that the purchaser of said premises may determine the said lease upon giving to the Lessees one month's notice in writing, and paying to said Lessees the value of any crops then upon said premises, and whatever ploughing he may have done on said premises; and a reasonable sum to pay the expenses of removal from said premises. Said lands shall also be sold subject to the condition that the current year's rent, due upon the 25th Feby, 1886, shall be paid to the now owners of said lands.

TERMS:

Ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Vendor's Solicitors at the time of the sale, and the balance of the purchase money within 30 days thereafter without interest.

Other terms and conditions will be the standing conditions of the Court.

For other terms and particulars, apply gratis to Messrs. Hatton & Wood, Barristers, Peterborough, or E. A. Peek, Esquire, Barrister, Peterborough.

Dated at Peterborough, this 29th Sept., 1885.

Little Lake Cemetery.

Adding to the Area of God's Acre.

Little Lake Cemetery has long been considered one of the most beautiful rural cemeteries in the Dominion, and when the present progressing extension and the improvements consequent thereon, are carried out, the result will be the making of a place of interment, which need not fear comparison with any other, anywhere. As already indicated in THE EXAMINER, the Cemetery Company have secured six acres, including the street to be given in place of the boundary road, lying west of the present inclosure. During the past week a good deal of preliminary work has been expended on the addition, under the supervision of Mr. John Kelly. Mr. James Weir has been employed in extracting the stumps of the sturdy pines that once towered amongst their companions of the primeval forest. Of these over two hundred have been lifted. They have been disposed of by placing them along the lake shore west from the present breakwater. They do not certainly constitute a great ornament, but they will prevent the washing away of the bank by the action of the water in spring, that is if the town council will take enough interest in the matter to make some arrangements to prevent their being floated away at high tide.

The new portion of the cemetery will make in the appearance of Little Lake Cemetery. The high bank that forms the present western boundary of the inclosure, will be suitably terraced and will present a series of fine sites for family vaults. From this terrace the new portion slopes beautifully westward, and will be in full view from several points in the town, and from the approach embracing nearly the whole length of Crescent street, that is if this street remains till the new portion is laid out and planted. Of this latter work Mr. Ranney, C. E., has charge and is now preparing places for the necessary systems of walks and drives. Of course at present there is nothing definite decided on. The work being done is merely preliminary.

The present approach and the green in front of the present entrance gates is to be preserved. The new portion will be enclosed on the new side of the approach by a fence similar to and parallel with the existing fence from the point where the latter touches the confines of the lake. At the upper terminus of this fence another set of entrance gates admitting to the new portion will be placed, facing north. It is also proposed to substitute a low wire fence for the present semi-circular fence at the present entrance.

In speaking of improvements it should b noticed that the stumps, to the number of eighty, have also been removed from the different portions of the unimproved places where they existed in the present cemetery. South of the fountain on the lower level of the grounds, on Maple avenue, considerable improvements have been made, resulting in making available 350 single burial plots. Maple avenue has been much improved. It is also proposed to open a new drive, starting from the point where Congor avenue strikes level ground; this drive will sweep round the base of the hill, southward and westward, and join one of the system of drives in the new portion.

NOTES.

Everywhere the hand of improvement is visible in this lovely city of the silent, though it is impossible on account of the perpetual falling of the leaves, to keep the tended swards and terraces clear, but in spite of that, it is evident that an eye of taste looks after the keeping of everything.

Considerable repairs to the vault have been necessary this season, on account of the severity of last winter's frost. A wide fissure had opened in the arch over the vault door, and made the rebuilding of a portion of the front gable necessary. The front buttresses have also been enlarged and furnished with new coping, and those, as well as the entire front tuck-pointed anew.

There have been a good number of placed in position this summer.

NEW MONUMENTS

On Mrs. Whyte's plot, a fine Canadian red granite column has been erected. An innovation is the placing on the bevelled top of low granite slabs, the names, ages and dates of death of the occupants of the plot, the family name or names, only appearing on the monument.

In the plot of the Dyell's, of Otonabee, a similar monument with similar arrangements has been put up.

Mr. N. Shaw has erected this season to the memory of his late wife, a very neat and tasty monument in blue veined marble.

An imposing monument in white bronze metal, marks the last resting place of the late Andrew Jackson.

Mr. W. H. Rackham has placed to the memory of his wife a neat and elegant cruciform monument in blue mottled marble.

Mrs. C. S. Nicholls has placed around the family burial plot, 32 x 30, a handsome heavy balustrade in cut Dummer lime-stone, to the gate of which stone steps and a stone platform lead up from Chapel avenue.

The Bennett family have placed a beautiful monument in white bronze metal on their burial plot.

The remains of the late Mossom Boyd have been removed to a new plot and a magnificent monument in gray Scotch granite is being erected. The base, of Queenston limestone is five feet square, and weighs three tons; the weight of the entire monument is 12 tons, and its height 21 feet. It was imported directly from Scotland.

A tasty blue-veined marble monument marks the grave of the late ex-Councillor Allin.

A cenotaph, in blue-veined marble, erected in memory of the late John Sherlock, a member of the Canadian contingent, who died at Kaiber, in the Soudan, on March 22nd, is an interesting addition to the mortuary monuments. In one part of the column there is inserted a fragment of the stone which, carved with his name, marks his lonely grave in the deserts of the Soudan.

A handsome gray granite monument adorns the family plot of the Thompson family, Douro.

The elegant tomb of the Dawson family has been removed from Otonabee to a plot in the southern part of the Cemetery.

Travelling Under Difficulties.

The Minister of the Interior has been having somewhat unpleasant experience in his overland trip to Prince Albert. From a letter dated Yorkton, October 4th, it is learned that he left Crescent, about twenty miles from Yorkton, on the previous afternoon, and was getting on spinningly when darkness set in. The prairie fires had made the whole country black, and the party lost the trail. Getting branches with which to make torches, a couple of hours were spent in looking after it, and then the search given up as unavailing. Unhitching the horses and spreading the buffalo robes, the party lay down to await daylight, supperless and weary. About 10 o'clock a snowstorm came on, a regular blizzard, which continued all night, and by daylight the prairie was covered with four or five inches of snow. It was a long and dreary waiting, and when daylight came the party found themselves in a direct line about a mile from their destination, and some two or three miles distant by the road. It was found, however, that there was a most dangerous ford across the river to make, and looking at it as they passed, the thought came that a more serious mishap than all-night outing in a prairie blizzard might have occurred.

Football.

Ottawa vs. Peterborough.

The game played on Saturday afternoon between the Ottawa and Peterborough Football Clubs resulted in a hollow victory for the visitors by a score of 36 to 0. Notwithstanding this disparity, however, the game was a stubbornly contested one, the home men contending every inch of vantage ground with much determination, although compelled to yield to superior strength and skill. Carter distinguished himself by his ubiquity and activity and played splendidly throughout, Orde's superior running ability was made manifest on several occasions, and Tytler showed up favorably. From the first kick-off the ball displayed marked affection for the Peterborough end of the field, and only once during the first half did the home men succeed in forcing it in the proximity of the visitors' goal, and then its stay was of short duration. When half-time was called the score stood 4 to 0 in favor of the men from the capital. During the second half the home men seemed to weaken for the visitors piled up points with alarming rapidity, and toward the close made two goals in quick succession.

The attendance was good and much interest was manifested in the game.

The following are the players' names with position, and the score is given below :—

The Eastern Problem.

Gladstone's Hopes.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Mr. Gladstone says he hopes the Bulgarian union will be a real one. He deprecates such movements as Servia and Greece threaten to make, and says he is unable to recognise their right to make such an invasion as they contemplate.

It is reported that the Servian war declaration has been printed.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The Vienna correspondent of the Times says:—The members of the triple alliance have agreed to advise the Porte to invite the powers to a formal conference on the Balkan troubles.

Delegates from the Servian Red Cross Society have arrived at Pesth and Vienna. They are commissioned to purchase hospital wagons.

An Adjustment.

BELGRADE, Oct. 17.—Wishing to avoid the impending war between herself and Servia, Bulgaria, since the Servian troops entered her territory, has offered King Milan an adjustment of the frontier. It is considered certain that Servia will accept, for she will thus obtain without firing a shot the object of her desires. It is believed the town of Widin will be yielded to Servia. Peace between Bulgaria and Servia will thus be assured, and King Milan will be seated securely on his throne.

The Union to be Maintained.

SOFIA, Oct. 17.—The ambassadors of the Powers have presented a collective note to the Government, urging Bulgaria to refrain from hostility, and holding her responsible if peace is disturbed through her menacing attitude. Prince Alexander was given an ovation on his arrival here. Addressing a crowd of citizens he promised to make every sacrifice in order to maintain the union. He afterwards presided at the meeting of the council to prepare a reply to the note of the Powers.

BERLIN, Oct. 18.—The North German Gazette says: The hope that diplomacy will succeed in peacefully settling the Roumelian difficulty, has increased in view of the fact that the Bulgarian authorities have arrested the leaders of several bands of Servian immigrants, who had been endeavoring to stir up revolt against King Milan, thus depriving Servia of her pretext for recrimination.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—A better feeling prevails at the Bourse to-day and three per cent rentes have advanced twenty-six centimes on the strength of the denial telegraphed from Nissa this morning that Servian troops had made any advance.

Burmah and Britain.

King Thebaw Cornered.

CALCUTTA, Oct. 17.—A gunboat is being fitted here with two heavy guns and four machine guns for service on the Irrawaddy river in Burmah. Military officials at Madras are ready to despatch troops to Rangoon on receipt of orders.

An Ultimatum.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The Indian Government's ultimatum to King Thebaw demands that a British Envoy be given a fitting reception, and that an action against the Bombay Trading Company be suspended until the British Envoy has examined the disputed points.

Troops on the March.

CALCUTTA, Oct. 17.—Advices from Mandalay state that the authorities there are busily engaged issuing war material and supplies, and that 3,000 troops are marching to Minula and 2,000 to Toungt.

Smallpox's Ravages.

A statement prepared by the Montreal Herald shows that there were interred in the Roman Catholic and Protestant cemeteries of Montreal from Aug. 29 to Oct. 9 the bodies of 1,180 persons who had died from smallpox. Of these 100 were English speaking and 1,080 were French Canadian. Of the 100 English speaking 48 were Protestants and 52 were Catholics.

Noticing Canada.

The British press now teems with news about Canada. Unfortunately the subject treated of is "Smallpox in Canada." The Saturday Review treats us to an editorial article, in which the supineness of the Montreal municipal authorities is properly lashed. Montreal will have itself to thank for it, but it is quite probable that for the next few years to come the name of the city will never be mentioned outside of Canada without smallpox being also mentioned.

Lady Ballot Holders.

It is estimated that one hundred ladies voted at the Branford Mayoralty contest on Wednesday last. The municipal elections of a year ago brought out a strong woman's vote in not a few localties. The question, therefore, as to whether or not woman can be induced to go to the polls may be regarded as settled. For the future all candidates for municipal honours must consult the new influence, and in proportion as the woman's vote comes to the front will the strength of the ring, the "workers," and the corner saloon be weakened.

The Hudson Bay Expedition.

News has at last been received of the observers who were sent out in 1884 to spend the winter at various points about the entrance to Hudson Bay for the purpose of watching the movements of the ice, with a view of ascertaining whether the bay can be utilized as a means of ingress and egress from the great Northwest. The Alert, which was sent out in the spring to bring back those who were left last year and to leave others in their places, has at last reached St. John's, Newfoundland, on her return. She found one of the stations deserted, but heard the parties in charge were on board a Hudson Bay ship. One of the staff had died of scurvy, in June, and the others were all alive and well. The fact that it has taken the Alert all the season to get in and out of the bay, and that she has had a hard time of it, does not look well for the feasibility of the scheme, though, of course, we cannot determine till she arrives at Halifax, which she will do in a few days, and brings a full report of the result of the observations taken during the last year. That the members of the staff are alive and well, with the one exception noted, is cause for congratulation, but, so far as can at present be judged, the Hudson Bay route does not look very promising.

A MODEST SUGGESTION.

A teachers' convention is to be held in Lindsay on the 6th and 7th of November, and the Warder takes the liberty of suggesting to the management the propriety of billeting the visitors on the public, on the dead head principle. This demand is made on the grounds that members of synods and conferences are treated in a similar manner. It would be difficult to make another proposal that would approach more nearly to an insult to the teaching profession. The idea of presenting the members of a profession (for such they insist it is—not a mere trade) to the public in the form of paupers! They are by no means paupers—they get well paid—too well paid, it is to be hoped, to drop their dignity sufficiently to be the recipients of charity in any form. Generally they are at least fairly paid, and it cannot be said they are overworked. Their hours are short and with two or three months holidays during the year, and their salary going on as regularly as clock work, the popular opinion is, to borrow a popular form of expression, that the teachers have a "soft time." Besides, the idea of teachers' conventions is an educational one. It is a form of preparing the teacher to better fulfil the duties of his profession, and we are sure that no teacher with the slightest scintilla of dignity or independence, would consent to have the "hat passed round" to raise funds to assist him in his studies, any more than he would be inclined to be "boarded around" on the free lunch principle while attending a teachers' convention. He would much prefer to pay his way like a man.

THE COLONIAL EXHIBITION.

It may not be amiss to call the attention of the people of Canada—Ontario and this county especially—to the proposed colonial exhibition to be held in London, England, in 1886. A few particulars in reference to it will be interesting to our readers, many of whom can take advantage of the occasion to make exhibits. The Colonial and Indian Exhibition to be held in London, England, commencing May 1st, 1886, is intended to be on a scale of great magnitude, having for object to mark an epoch in the relations of all the parts of the British Empire with each other. In order to give becoming significance to the event, a Royal Commission is issued for the holding of this exhibition, for the first time since 1862; and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has been appointed President by Her Majesty the Queen. The very large space of 54,000 square feet has been allotted to the Dominion of Canada by command of the President, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The exhibition is to be purely Colonial and Indian, and no competition from the United Kingdom, or from foreign nations will be permitted, the object being to exhibit to the world at large what the Colonies can do. The grandest opportunity ever offered to Canada is thus afforded to show the distinguished place she occupies, by the progress she has made in agriculture, in horticulture, in the industrial and fine arts, in the manufacturing industries, in the newest improvements in manufacturing machinery and implements, in public works by models and designs; also in an adequate display of her vast resources in the fisheries, and in forest and mineral wealth, and also in shipping. All Canadians of all parties and classes are invited to come forward and vie with each other in endeavouring on this great occasion to put Canada in her true place as the premier colony of the British Empire, and to establish her proper position before the world. Every farmer, every producer, and every manufacturer, has interest in assisting, it having been already demonstrated that extension of trade always follows such efforts. There is no reason why Canada, and even this town and county should not be well represented. At even world's exhibitions, where the products of the oldest and most progressive countries of the world were represented, Canada and Peterborough have taken their due share of the honors. And with only the other colonies of the Empire to compete with, this country, generally acknowledged to be the most progressive colony, should not be in the least afraid to enter the lists. We can never be a great manufacturing people till we can secure a market for our industrial products, and no better way has ever been presented than that afforded by this exhibition. It is to be hoped that those directly interested will duly appreciate its importance.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

One of the best testimonies to the value of vaccination is offered by Dr. Ross, of Montreal, who publishes the Anti-Vaccinator, and has gone to considerable trouble in trying to persuade people that it is no use being vaccinated. The doctor set out the other day for a trip to Toronto, and was spotted on the train by the Ontario Medical Health Officer, who made him show his arm, which bore three vaccination marks, one quite fresh! Dr. Ross' conduct in opposing vaccination under these circumstances, is quite incomprehensible.

The Collingwood Bulletin of this week has a strong article on the subject of "Sacred Advertising." The point is says the Globe, well taken. The extent to which the pulpit is used to advertise projects of various kinds is both a marvel and a scandal. Many a good sermon has been spoiled by having a string of secular advertisements attached to its tail. The evil has been complained of time and again. The improvement effected, however, has [illegible] Associations express their views as to what is and what is not legitimate pulpit advertising?

Dominion Doings.

The case against Louis Kribbs, city editor of the Toronto News, was called in the Montreal police court Friday. Kribbs did not appear, his bail of $100 was forfeited and a warrant issued for his re-arrest.

A Montreal woman threw cayenne pepper into the eyes of a smallpox placarder. She was fined $20 in court, and allowed to walk out when she couldn't pay the fine.

Action to recover $200,000 on a contract north of Lake Superior has been entered against the C.P.R., in Montreal. It is the first of a long list of threatened suits.

Rev. W. Leclaire, left Montreal Friday for Rome, to make arrangements for the opening of a Canadian college there.

It is expected that the Canadian Pacific grain elevator which is being constructed in Montreal, and which will have a capacity of half a million bushels, will be completed by May next.

Receipts of the Grand Trunk railway for week ending 10th inst., were $329,739.

Richard Dickens, bartender at Clow's restaurant, Toronto, was drowned in the bay Friday afternoon. He either fell or jumped off the end of Church street wharf.

Fire in the generating room of the Toronto gas works did $500 damages Friday.

The residence of ex-Ald. Lepper, Winchester street, Toronto, was burgalized. The burglars got away with $50 cash, and dropped two gold watches in their hurry to escape.

W. Montgomery, tea merchant, George street, Toronto, has assigned with liabilities of $3,000; assets about $1,500.

The will of the late E. N. Rutherford, who died in Toronto, September 13th, has been entered for probate. The value of the real estate is estimated at $40,000 and personalty is sworn at $163,730.

Friday afternoon as Mrs. Peter McDonald of Walpole, Ont., was gathering eggs in the barn and while standing on a beam she lost her balance and fell breaking an arm and a leg. Her recovery is doubtful.

The annual convocation of University College, Toronto, took place Friday.

Six persons in one family had smallpox in Hamilton and the fourth died on Friday. He was one of the unfortunate Redden family aged 14.

Worthy of Imitation.

Sir Richard Cartwright has been holding a series of meetings in South Huron, to let his constituents know what he thought of the action of Parliament during the year. Every member ought, when at all practicable, to imitate Sir Richard's example in this respect. A man is sent to Parliament to serve the people, and he ought to give an account of himself without waiting until the approach of a general election forces him to do so. Very excellent educational work can be performed by political addresses delivered while elections are yet afar off. Mr. William Paterson spoke last week before the Young Men's Liberal Club in St. Thomas. He never fails to put his points clearly, and never spares himself when he can do a service to his party and the country.

How Many Know?

Says Bill Arp in the Atlanta Constitution: I know a young man who was poor and smart, and a friend sent him to one of these schools up north, and he stayed two years and came back as a mining engineer and a bridge-builder, and last year he planned and built a cotton factory and is getting a large salary. What a grand opening there is in this region for boys who have a mechanical genius, or have a fancy for minerals or for mining. How many college boys are there in this state who can tell what kind of native timber will bear the heaviest burdens, or why you take white oak for one part of a wagon and ash for another, or what timber will last longest under water and what out of water. How many know sandstone from limestone or iron from manganese. How many know how to cut a rafter or a brace without a pattern. How many know which turns the fastest, the top of the wheel or the bottom as the wagon moves along the ground. How many know how steel is made and how a snake can climb a tree.

How many know that a horse gets up before and a cow gets up behind, and the cow eats grass from her and the horse eats to him. How many know that a surveyor's mark upon a tree never gets any higher from the ground or what tree bears fruit without bloom.

The Balkan Business.

It is impossible to understand or explain the meagre and contradictory dispatches which reach us daily from the Balkan region. One story goes that the Christians of the provinces are united in a determination to throw off the Moslem yoke, but this is in contradiction to the rumor that Servia is threatening Bulgaria, while Greece and Turkey are represented as being united in the resolve to prevent the creation of a new power or powers in the disturbed territories. The only point clear through it all is the optimistic view advanced a day or two ago is not justified by the facts of the situation. Eastern Europe is at this moment a vast powder magazine, through which turbulent men are carrying lighted torches that may at any time cause a tremendous explosion. The crisis may have arrived by the time these words reach some of our readers.

...ther Baby's Baby.

Into the midst of the crowded street,
Almost under the hurrying feet,
There fell a thought of the heart Divine,
That thrilled to the very core of mine.

Clinging close to a toil-worn hand,
There passed a shadow from baby-land—
Only a shadow—so white and thin
It licked the round of a baby's chin.

It lacked the coral of baby lips,
The pink of a baby's finger tips,
The silken floss of a baby's hair,
Kissed and smoothed with the tweakest care.

But out of its innocent baby eyes,
There looked a baby's sweet surprise,
And close to its innocent baby breast,
A baby's baby was tightly prest.

Wavering slow, with uncertain tread,
It followed still where its mother led,
Ever lovingly glancing down
On that headless doll in a ragged gown.

And at every glance its love and pride
Came and went like a rosy tide
Over its poor little pallid face—
Frail lily buds in a noisome place.

It passed, but an angel walks with me
In the shape of its lovely memory,
And out of the long day's toil and care,
I brought this blossom and fruit so fair.

No life so narrow, no heart so lone,
No hands so empty they hold not one
Of the loves that bless. And God above
Shared with that babe the [illegible]

Giving in Marriage.

Come, let us sit together for a space,—
In this still room remote from friendly mirth,
Afar from light and music, face to face,
Each unto each the dearest thing on earth.
Love, they have left us, our two bonny brides,
Our tall, grave girl, our winsome, laughing pet;
Ah me! How wide the chasm that divides
Our life from theirs; how far their feet are set
From the calm path they trod with us so long.
How we shall miss them, we who loved them
On winter nights when winds are blowing strong,
On summer mornings, when the roses blow,
But—happy but—we still clasp hand in hand,
Eye still meets eye and true hearts understand.

Love, they have left us empty of the mirth
That cheered our homestead while they sojourned here;
Yea, they have left us lonely on the earth,
Lone, but together, solitude most dear;
Ah, God, go with them to the stranger nests,
That love has built for them and theirs to come.
God keep all warm and living in their breasts
Love's holy flame, the altar-fire of home.
Dear, they have left us; we no longer hold
The first, best place, however leal each heart.
Yet have we treasure left, refined gold,
Love's sterling ore, without its baser part,
The wide old house has lost its nestling birds,
But we are left. Ah, love, what need of words?

—All the Year Round.

The Big Things of America.

An English characteristic, strongly developed and even grotesquely caricatured in America, is the love of big things, which is, after all, a failing akin to virtue, and which will guide America into fair pastures after adversity and Mr. Matthew Arnold shall have chastened and purified Philistia. At present Americans are satisfied with things because they are large; and if not large they must have cost a great deal of money. * * * If a stranger were to ask an intelligent and well informed American what, in his opinion, was best worth seeing in the United States, he would probably say the pork packing establishments at Chicago. To this loathsome favor, like Yorick's skull, all must come. The young beauty on her honeymoon tour, the statesman and tourist, are all drawn by some mysterious fascination to the shambles. They watch the unfortunate swine hurry up the broad way which leads to destruction; in absorbing horror, they see the throats of the victims cut and the descent of the victim, living or dead, it matters little which, into the boiling sea below, the scraping, disemboweling, and all the revolting details of the toilet of the dead. Few are permitted to escape the spectacle. Lord Coleridge, carried to the shambles by his friends of the Chicago bar, after having witnessed a few executions, begged to be allowed to retire, as otherwise he should be unable to eat sausage again. Whether Matthew Arnold saw and reflected on the mystery I know not, but we will hope that the apostle of culture refused to follow this worse than Ashantee custom. When I declined absolutely to witness the pig-killing my Chicago acquaintances were distinctly ruffled.—Sir Lepel Henry Griffin.

Curiosities of Nature.

In Bedford county, Va., there stands a chestnut tree that is twenty-seven feet around.

A Chinese yam in an Ithaca (N. Y.) garden is growing at the rate of five inches a day.

In Jefferson county, Mo., a parsnip fifty inches long and fifteen inches in circumference was grown.

At the Tokay vineyard, near Fayetteville, N. C., is a vine twenty-five years old, which bore over 100 bushels of grapes.

A large farm near Stockton, Cal., has been completely cleaned of its crops by millions of little birds no larger than a man's thumb.

The Arctic raspberry is one of the smallest plants known. A six-ounce vial will hold the whole plant, branches, leaves and all.

A watermelon vine grown by the Reams brothers, of Harris Co., Ga., is 1,700 feet long, and it has produced 400 pounds of melons.

The famous Bidwell Bar orange tree in California is twenty-five feet tall, and its trunk is forty-five inches in circumference. It bore last year 2,075 oranges.

The largest apple ever grown in America came from Nebraska, and weighed 29½ ounces. The Smithsonian Institution has a model of this apple.

In a garden at Bowling Green, Ky., is a bush that bears a large deep red rose, with two perfect small roses in the center which are miniature copies of the big one.

On the table lands on Southwestern Arizona, at an altitude of 8,000 to 12,000 feet, a species of wild potato grows which is said to be superior in taste and flavor to the best cultivated potatoes.

John H. Parnell's peach orchard at West Point, Ga., is the largest in the world. The trees are planted upon different slopes, so that when all are bearing a crop is certain in one place or another every year. There are 125,000 trees.

Don't Sign Papers.

People who thoughtlessly sign documents often put their property in peril, and many men have been ruined by indorsing for a friend. How often have good-natured men's fortunes been diminished by obligations incurred carelessly or without thought of consequences. During the rebellion the steamer Jessie was seized because it was supposed she was a blockade runner. The case was delayed in the courts for eighteen years, a fact which is very discreditable to our lawyer rulers. In the meantime all the parties defending the ownership of the vessel had disappeared. The only responsible person that could be found was a young girl of seventeen, whose father was on one of the bonds. An obligation of seventy thousand dollars has been rolled up, which this young woman will be forced to pay unless the law somehow interposes to save her. She will be ruined financially, as that sum is greater than her inheritance. Here is a case in which a person is punished who is entirely innocent of any offence. But the moral of this instance is: Don't put your name on bonds or notes, for it may injure not only yourself, but your innocent children.

Three Meals a Day.

An English writer gives some much-needed advice as to the times and frequency of meals. In his opinion the present usual practice of three meals a day has good reason, as well as custom, in its favor. When work of any kind is being done, whether mental or bodily, the intervals between taking food should not be so long as to entail demands on the system when its store of material for the generation of force is exhausted. An ordinary full meal, in the case of a healthy man, is generally considered to have been completely digested and to have passed out of the stomach in four hours. A period of rest should then be granted to the stomach. Assuming that two hours are allowed for this, the interval between one meal and another would be six hours; and this accords with the experience of most men. During rest and sleep there is less waste going on, and especially during sleep there is greatly diminished activity of all the functions of the body. The interval, therefore, between the last meal of one day and the first of the next may be longer, as it generally is, than between the several day meals. Assuming that breakfast be taken about 8 or 9 o'clock, there should be a mid-day meal about 1 or 2. The character of this must depend on the nature of the day's occupation and the convenience of the individual. With women and children this is generally their hungry time, and the mid-day repast, whether called luncheon or dinner, is the chief meal. So it is with the middle and laboring classes, for the most part. But for merchants, professional men and others, whose occupations take them from home all the day, this is inconvenient, and moreover, it is not found conducive to health or comfort to take a full meal in the midst of the day's work. There can, however, be no doubt that much evil arises from attempting to go through the day without food, and then with exhausted powers sitting down to a hearty meal. Something of a light, easily digestible, but sustaining character should be taken toward 1 or 2 o'clock.

A Kingly Joker.

Multifarious are the anecdotes—fables, some of them, I really believe—told of the King. He is a misogynist, a hater of court ceremonials, yet withal a man who stands upon his dignity; a passionate lover of music and mountain scenery, and a great stickler for the autonomy of Bavaria. He will not have it Prussianized at any price. His favorite seat is a hunting lodge up in the mountains. It is said that he sleeps in a large lofty room with the ceiling painted to represent the firmament, and a practicable moon shedding a mellow light from one quarter of the artificial heavens. The perspective is managed so as to give the illusion of spaciousness, and through the distant trees cut out in the canvas, as he reclines, may be heard the splash of falling waters. Their lullaby hushes him to sleep. Mæcenas had a fondness for the same soporific. Sometimes his Majesty rises in the night, has a black steed saddled, and dashes off at a whirlwind speed up and down the hill roads—which are well kept for that reason—like a phantom horseman pursued by some relentless decree of the supernatural powers. The finest stud in Bavaria is to be found in his stables, but the cattle are cast soon and often; they are thoroughly worn out and broken down after a very few years in the royal service. He plays practical jokes on his retinue sometimes. It is related of him that a Minister arrived in hot haste once to crave an audience on important business of state. The King was out hunting the chamois, but by some chance the Minister succeeded in catching up with the party. Ludwig preceded him to a game-keeper's hut, where he sometimes used to lurch, and went in telling him to attend him. The Minister waiting one hour, two hours, and at last, losing patience, and fearing that his royal master had been attacked by some sudden illness, forced the door. No king was there. He had made his exit by a window at the back and was away on the high hills in pursuit of the game. In the capital His Majesty often commands an opera—generally one by Wagner, for whom he has as strange a predilection as a predecessor on the throne had for Lola Montez—and this opera is produced in the middle of the day. The theatre is darkened, and nobody is admitted to the auditorium but himself. If he is pleased he sends a prima donna, not a bracelet nor a ring, but a boquet of flowers plucked by his own hands. He once had "Lohengrin" enacted on the Starberger See, the borders of the lake having been illuminated a giorno at his expense.—Tinsley's Magazine.

Charley wanted to give Clara a Christmas present, but he couldn't make up his mind what it should be; so the next time he called he frankly told her the difficulty under which he was laboring. "Want to make me a present, Charley!" Clara exclaimed in well-disguised astonishment. "Why, Charley, you forget yourself." Charley took the hint and offered himself on the spot.

Young ladies in Vienna wear their initials worked in silk and gold on the front of their jackets. Presumably it is meant that they may wear the initials of the favored suitor.

For the extension and completion of the network of German railroads grants to the extent of 60,000,000 marks have been asked for. Of this sum 49,484,000 marks are required for the construction of fourteen new lines of a total length of 365 miles, and the balance is needed for the completion of existing railroads.

German statistics show that there has been an almost unprecedented increase of students during the last decade, and at the present moment Germany, with a population of 45,260,000, has 25,000 students attending her universities, while England, with a population of 26,600,000 has only 5,500 students at Oxford and Cambridge.

At Biddeford, Me., one recent morning, a newly appointed Deputy Sheriff went into a liquor saloon to make a seizure, but waited while the preoccupied proprietor finished sprinkling the floor, when he made known his business. At the same time it has been noticed that great criminals are more particular about their religion than men who have not sinned.—New Orleans Picayune.

"Father," he said as he came running in from school, "did you ever drill an oil well and make $50,000?" "No, my son, I never did." "I was in hopes you had, for I wanted to brag to the boys." Subscribers to the DAILY EVENING EXAMINER will greatly oblige us by reporting promptly any neglect in the delivery of their paper.

"A Masonic Mystery."

Secure your seats for the lecture on this subject, by Dr. Wild, in Bradburn's Opera House, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 28th. Dr. Wild is one of the most eloquent and original orators on the continent.

Educational.

The committee on appointments, consisting of the whole board, have appointed Miss Aldridge to the position of teacher in the West Ward School. Miss Aldridge has made arrangements with the trustees of the section in which she has been teaching, which will enable her to assume her new duties as soon as the seating has been completed.

Complimentary.

The latest number of the Canadian Live Stock Journal, an excellent class journal published in Hamilton, in referring to the exhibit of animals at the Industrial Exhibition, Toronto, says:—"Mr. Joseph Redmond, of Peterborough, who showed a very nice lot of young animals, was successful in winning first place with a very fine bull calf.'

Joe Murphy and the "Kerry Gow."

Mr. J. W. Carroll, agent for the J. S. Murphy "Kerry Gow" Co., accompanied by Mr. Hobbs, Port Hope's bill poster, is in town making arrangements for the appearance here of the famous Irish comedian on the 27th and 29th instant. On account of Dr. Wild's lecture they will give no performance on the 28th.

Entirely Incorrect.

In an item dealing with the relations of the proposed teachers' convention with the Board of Education, the Review of Saturday evening says of the executive of the convention:—"They applied to the Board for the use of a room, but it was not granted." This is entirely incorrect. No such application was ever made to the Board. All the information the Board possessed in respect to the convention was obtained through the public announcements made. The item was evidently written by some one possessing more prejudice than information.

An Interesting Class.

The young men's class for Bible study will be resumed on Tuesday evening at eight o'clock, in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. It will be conducted during the present season by Rev. F. H. Wallace, M. A., B. D., the able pastor of the Charlotte street Methodist church. He has mapped out an exceedingly interesting course of study for the first month or two, among the subjects being "The Form of the Bible," "The Veracity of the Bible," "The Authority of the Bible, Versions, Interpretation, Geography, Manners and Customs, Institutions of the Bible, etc. As a means of intellectual and spiritual profit, this class will be very valuable, and we trust that many of the young men of the town will set aside one hour a week for it.

Mars in the Ascendant.

A belligerent wave seems to be passing over this part of the country, and during the last few evenings our usually peaceable town has been disturbed by disgraceful fights on the street, and minor pugilistic encounters in various quarters. On Friday evening a party of toughs, said to be moulders at the Stove Works, kicked up a big racket in a leading hotel, and after being ejected, disturbed the slumbers of peaceable citizens by continuing the row on the streets. Last evening a party of roughs attacked P. C. Adams while he was discharging his duty, and handled him severely. The officer, however, stuck pluckily to his duty, and landed two of the party in the lock up. They were brought up at the police court this morning, and remanded till Wednesday.

The Drama.

HATTIE WARNER AND THE "SILVER KING."

To-morrow evening Harry Miner's Company will appear at Bradburn's Opera House in the now famous drama, "The Silver King." No play that has been produced for years past has met with more general favor than has this—crowded houses and delighted audiences having been the invariable rule wherever it was presented. Mr. Miner's company may be relied upon to produce it in first-class style, and the presence of Mrs. Hattie Warner, a new star on the dramatic firmament, lends additional interest to their appearance here. This lady is known as "The New Jersey Lily," being a native of Paterson, N.J. The following notice from the New York World should be enough to ensure a crowded house to-morrow evening: "Mrs. Hattie Warner, whose beauty has bewildered the men and made the women envious for years, made her debut to-night as Lady Teasle in "School for Scandal." The Opera House was crowded to witness the first appearance of the new theatrical phenomenon, who is regarded as a rival to Mrs. Langtry, by the admiring press. Her [illegible] are said to be simply magnificent, and her acting such as to render her one of the foremost interpreters of society drama in the world.

JOHN M. LINDSAY'S COMPANY.

This company concluded their engagement here on Saturday evening, when they gave "Cast on the World," and the farce "Betsey Baker." They expect to return and give other performances in a few weeks.

Sale of Household Goods.

Mr. C. Young, of Ashburnham, having disposed of his hotel and being about to leave town, is offering for sale the whole of his household furniture, the contents of 15 bedrooms, parlors, bar, kitchen, pantries, &c., The furniture comprises parlour sets and dining room tables, chairs, sideboards silverware and glass, coal stoves, beds and bedding, washstands and toilet sets, refrigerator, bar fixtures and other articles innumerable. This sale will afford an excellent opportunity for procuring bargains in furniture, &c. The sale will take place on Tuesday, Oct. 20th.

What they are Saying.

"We run em in."—P. C. Adams.

They were too heavy for us.—The local football men.

But little Carter is a daisy.—The visitors.

Don't forget the Philharmonic meeting to-night.—The apostles of music, St. Paul and Saint. John.

They say I can't qualify, but I can run anyway.—Lafayette F.

What We May Expect.

Boys to cease throwing stones at the Drill Shed.

The Town Council to persevere in their policy of masterly inactivity until Crescent street has become part of the Little Lake.

The cis-Atlantic Jersey Lily to-morrow evening.

The ladies to say that her diamonds and costumes are "too sweet for anything."

The Police Magistrate to mete out stern justice to disturbers of the public peace.

Increasing easterly winds, mostly cloudy weather, with rain, more especially in the southern portions, followed by colder northern and north-west winds to-morrow.

We would Like to Know

If the fighting stove moulders think they have a monopoly in "sand."

And can "mould" public opinion by throwing stones at policemen.

If its true that ladies all over the country are going crazy about the elegant dresses and magnificent diamonds worn by Hattie Warner in the "Silver King."

Who were the miscreants who removed a nut from a carriage wheel in George street church driving shed last night.

Which of our local Tory lawyers will be made a revising barrister to-morrow.

And if he will be interested in the post-office site.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

Wickedness by the Well-Full.

A ghastly discovery was made at Dyersville, near Dubuque, Iowa, on Thursday evening. Some children fishing in a pond dragged up a box which contained the remains of nine prematurely born babes. The box had been tight and had contained alcohol, and had been constantly washed by a spring which furnishes all Dyersville with its water supply. Suspicion points to a doctor who removed to Nebraska two years ago, who had been suspected of being a malpractitioner.

South Monaghan.

The exhibition of the South Monaghan Agricultural Society, was held at South Monaghan on Tuesday last. The rain killed the outside show outright. The inside exhibition was held, however, and prizes were awarded to the articles exhibited.

Lindsay.

Such rapid progress has been made with the work of building the new St. Paul's church that the contractors will have it finished by the time agreed, early next month. During the last two weeks the tower has been finished and the scaffolding removed. The details have been carried out particularly well, and the tower is an ornament to the church and gives a fine appearance to the front of the building. The finishing touches are being given to the church outside and by the end of the week will be completed. Inside the work is being pushed with speed, principally in the direction of finishing up the plastering and wainscoting. The chancel is still encumbered with the scaffolding but a fair view can be had of the roof. It is beautiful, and is no doubt the handsomest roof inside any church in the Midland district. A furnace has been delivered and will be put in to heat the church. When finished we shall have pleasure in describing the church at some length.—Post.

Police Court.

Assault on an Officer—Malicious Injury to the Drill Shed.

John Pouliette and William Halloran, two employees of the stove foundry, were arraigned before Police Magistrate Dumble this morning, the first prisoner, Pouliette, charged with using profane language on the street last evening and with assaulting P. C. Adams, and Halloran with assaulting Adams while in the execution of his duty. It seems that shortly after six o'clock last evening, Adams arrested the prisoner Pouliette on Charlotte street, near Bethune, for his disorderly conduct, and was taking him to the lock-up, when he was set upon by eight moulders who knocked him down, took his baton away, and rescued the prisoner. They then made off, but not before Adams had marked out Halloran, who has an ugly scar on his face, and given chase to him. He captured him, too, and landed him safe in the lock-up. He then went home, got his revolver, and sallied out in quest of his first prisoner, and it was not long before he came up with him and the party of toughs [illegible] him prisoner, and although the prisoner's companions threw stones at the constable, he held fast to his captive and landed him with Halloran behind the bars.

Mr. O'Meara appeared for both prisoners at the Police Court, and as the prosecution was not ready to go on, the case was enlarged till Wednesday. Bail was accepted one surety in $100, and personal bail of $100.

Fred Van Norman and John McCullough, two boys charged on remand with committing malicious injury to the drill shed by breaking windows, were each fined $5 and costs.

Liberal Marriage Laws.

The marriage law of the State of New York is wonderfully accommodating. According to a recent opinion of a judge, a man may marry in the State, go to England and marry again there, cross to France and repeat the operation, and so in every country in Europe, to say nothing of countries elsewhere, return to New York, resume relations with his wife, and not be punishable for bigamy.

SALE OF FARM LAND

In the Township of Otonabee,

within six miles of the Town of Peterborough

Under and by virtue of a judgment of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, and in the Chancery Division thereof, made in the action of HARTLEY et al., vs. BEAVIS et al., and dated the Fourth day of September, A.D., 1885, there will be offered for sale, with the approval of the Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Peterborough, at his Chambers, in the said Town of Peterborough on

Saturday, 7th day of Nov'r, 1885

at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon, the following valuable farm property viz:—

The West Half of Lot Number 26, in the 10th Concession of the said Township of Otonabee.

containing one hundred acres more or less.

Upon the said property there are about 25 acres of hardwood land, the remainder thereof being cleared and under cultivation.

There are upon the said premises two barns and a log dwelling house, with woodshed attached, and a never-failing well. One of said barns is frame, 40 feet x 30 feet; the other a post barn, 50 feet x 27 feet; the said dwelling house is 30 feet x 20 feet. The soil is clay or clay loam, and well adapted for raising wheat and other grains, and the property is situated in a first-class farming locality, within six miles of the Town of Peterborough.

The said premises will be sold subject to a lease thereof to Samuel Heatherly and John Heatherly, the Lessees therein mentioned, which has one year to run from 1st March, 1886, at a yearly rental of $139.00 per annum, and which said list contains a provision that the purchaser of said premises may determine the said lease upon giving to the Lessees one month's notice in writing, and paying to said Lessees the value of any crops then upon said premises, and whatever ploughing he may have done on said premises; and a reasonable sum to pay the expenses of removal from said premises. Said lands shall also be sold subject to the condition that the current year's rent, due upon the 25th Feb'y, 1886, shall be paid to the now owners of said lands.

TERMS:

Ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Vendor's Solicitors at the time of the sale, and the balance of the purchase money within 30 days thereafter without interest.

Other terms and conditions will be the standing conditions of the Court.

For other terms and particulars, apply gratis to Messrs. Hatton & Wood, Barristers, Peterborough, or E. A. Peck, Esquire, Barrister, Peterborough.

Dated at Peterborough, this 28th Sept., 1885.

Prof. Dorenwend at Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough.

Baldness, gray hair, thin hair, dandruff, falling of the hair, &c., can all be remedied by the use of Dr. C. Dorenwend's Great German "Hair Magic," the most wonderful preparation for effectually restoring color and vitality of the hair, preventing falling, producing a heavy growth, making hair grow on bald spots, &c., ever discovered. It is unfailing in its results, as the many testimonials received daily by the sole owner and manufacturer for America, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, can testify. The Professor will be at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26, 27 and 28, and every one who wishes to try a bottle can procure it from him. The price is $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Call on him and procure a bottle.

The Eastern Warcloud.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 19.—The minister of war presents his report showing that there are 200,000 men under arms. He recommends that in addition all the reserves will be called out. The expenditures up to the present were estimated at £500,000 for the increased mobilization and maintenance of the army. To put the army into the field and to keep it there for six months would require, according to report, £600,000. The Porte is on the eve of concluding a loan with a financial syndicate. An understanding undoubtedly exists with Greece of such a character as to leave the Porte free from apprehension as to Macedonia in case there is war with Bulgaria and no great power intervenes to prevent the restoration of the status quo ante. The Sultan is much inclined to settle the matter directly with Prince Alexander, but neither the military party here nor Russia will allow this. Should the old form of administration be restored in Eastern Roumelia, Aleko Pasha would probably return as Governor. Lord Salisbury's position continues to give great offence here. The Turks consider it a distinct invitation to the other provinces to revolt. Sir H. De Wolff's mission and the appointment of Egyptian Commissioners hang fire.

VIENNA, Oct. 19.—The situation in the East has again assumed a serious aspect, owing to the bellicose attitude of Servia. Prince Alexander after endeavoring to patch up an agreement with King Milan, telegraphed the latter that he intended sending Minister Grekoff to the Servian Court on a special mission. King Milan declined to receive the mission. It is evident from King Milan's answer that Servia is determined to fight for territorial aggrandisement.

BERLIN, Oct. 16.—The severity with which boycotting is being carried on is shown by an incident which occurred at a recent funeral at Macroom, county Cork. A boycotted relative of the deceased, together with his family, joined the funeral procession, whereupon the the priests and mourners withdraw. The obsequies were finally performed by three Catholic curates unattended.

ONTARIO'S SCHOOL SYSTEM.

At the recent meeting of the Wentworth Teachers' Convention, Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education, gave an exceedingly interesting address on the subject of the school system of Ontario:—

The task I have set for myself to-night is to ask you to take a bird's-eye view of what the public school system of Ontario involves with its 5,000 schools, its 7,198 teachers and nearly half a million of children. When I think of it I am appalled at the responsibility which rests, not on me alone, but on the teachers and the 20,000 trustees, but more than all on the parents of this great army. Half a million pairs of little feet finding their way to school every morning; half a million pairs of eyes resting on the teachers from 9 o'clock until 4; half a million little souls receiving every day impressions as deathless as the nature on which they are imprinted. Beside this, we have 27,000 pupils of the Separate Schools, the 100 high schools with 12,000 children and then the university. Looking along this line from the Kindergarten to the university, you will see that the responsibility would be too great for one man but for the democratic system under which it is constituted. Now and again we meet people who have certain objections to it. I don't think it needs any defence, but I might call your attention to some of its most meritorious features. It is a democratic system, conferring its benefits on rich and poor alike. Its benefits are virtually free to all. You have noticed that the political parties of England are divided on the question of free education. I have had letters from the Marquis of Lorne inquiring about our free schools and the results of the system, and I was happy to be able to reply to him that the results were such, that after thirty or forty years' experience of it, no one could be found who wanted to return to the old system.

Somebody says that our education costs too much, and is increasing ever year. I can scarcely conceive how the education of a people can be too dearly bought, unless our energies are misdirected altogether. Leaving out consideration of the moral force, was it not the people with the intellectual force who ruled in every age? Have we, too, not a future? Let us see that those who wield the destinies of this empire shall be of that intelectual power which will assert their right to rule this land and to rule it without interference from anybody. I have no doubt that somebody objected to the $200 or $300 that the United States spent on the education of Ulysses S. Grant, at West Point, but in the hour of his country's need Gen. Grant became his country's saviour. That education may have saved the United States and yet there were and are croakers in the United States about West Point. As they say on the other side of the line, you can't tell in what log cabin the next President will be born. Neither can you tell from what log school-house may come our future statesmen or judges. It is true our schools are costing a little more every year, and I think they are worth more. They have increased $100,000 in cost in the last nine years. That is an increase of only 3 per cent., but your municipal institutions controlled directly by yourselves have, in the same time, increased a million dollars or 20 per cent. I don't think the increase in the cost of the schools has been inordinate. Again, look at the cost per pupil. In 1876 the cost was $6,15. In 1884 it was $6,69, an increase of 54 cents. I believe the pupil gets half a dollar's worth of benefit more than he did in 1876. Education is better than it was nine years ago; the teachers are better and I believe the world is better. Comparing our record with others the comparison is in our favor. In Illinois the cost per puplil is $11.20, in Massachusetts, $17.71; in Michigan, $9.11. in New York, $10,70, while in Ontario it is but $.669. How much does it cost to keep a boy in the Reformatory or in any other of our penal institutions? I don't mean that the educated boy will keep out of the Reformatory, but the discipline of school forms him so that he is less likely to go there than the boy who has not been at school. In the county of Wentworth the cost per pupil is the same as the Provincial average, $6.69 In the town of Dundas the cost is $7.15, a little higher than the average of Ontario towns, which is $6.84. The expenditure in Dundas is a little more than in most other places, but I am not sorry. I believe you get value for it.

Objectors say there is too much cramming in our system, and that the education process is so severe that it is likely to result in premature insanity. The average school attendance is only 46 per cent., and 236,000 children attend school less than 100 days in the year. Do you think there is much danger of their going insane from the educational process? Take the case of your own town. There are 818 children on the school register, but of these 391 attended less than 100 days last year. And here is the greatest source of waste in the school system, irregularity of attendance. In nine cases out ten the child who does not get along is the child who is irregular in his attendance. There is very little danger of insanity, nor do I think that the system is a system of cramming. There may be teachers whose methods are wrong, but I believe that the teachers of Ontario are as logical, as well trained and as capable as those of any other country under the sun.

Your changes in the school law and the school books are numerous and aggravating, says the next objector. It is true we may have too many changes in the school law, but that is the case with all the laws, and will continue to be so as long as you have a legislative body and as long as you judge your representatives by what they do rather than by what they let alone. However, the law passed last year will remain intact for years to come, unless it develops some defect which we expect not there. We have changes in our school books, too, but we have only necessary and advisable changes. The farmer to-day does not cut his wheat with a sickle, but with the modern reaper; the tools of years ago have been laid by for later and better improvements. We take our school books and put them abreast of the best methods and the most refined literature of to-day. The paltry cost of the occasional change is nothing to the benefit accruing to the community from it. The readers that have just gone out were 17 years in use. The grammar was authorized 15 or more years ago, and of all the schoolbooks only Kirkland & Scott's arithmetic has been authorized since 1877. Isn't it time there was a change? The standard of our teachers is high, and it is difficult to get certificates. It is well that it should be so. The profession is not so high in New York as it is in Ontario.

Mr. Ross concluded his interesting address by urging parents to take every advantage of the school system and get full value for their expenditure.

It is Reform rule for thirteen years that has done it. The Bobsaygeon Independent thus discourses:—The governments on this continent are numbered by hundreds. There ments and provincial governments, and all sorts of governments, but as Mr. Smiff truly remarks, the only one of them all that in the words of the bard, "Can look the whole world in the face, for it owes not any man," is our own little Provincial Government of Ontario.

The Bailliboro and Centreville shows, the former 7th and 8th, and latter of 12th and 13th were each an excellent display, though the rain of the 13th prevented many from attending at Centreville.

An exceptionally good time is looked for at the hill on or about Nov. 5th. Amongst the attractions will be the disposing of an autograph quilt, to which considerable attention has been given in preparation.

The Wallace Point bridge is now undergoing repairs. The new iron swing is to be placed on the old pier, which is being substantially refilled. The public notices of stopping traffic during repairs were prematurely posted, affecting materially the attendance of many from South Monaghan at the Central exhibition.

In the recent little puff regarding the walk-over at football at Centreville, no explanation was given of training of either party before the friendly contest mentioned. It is supposed that the Fraserville boys had a game or two before the date of their victory at Centreville. At least it is well known that their ball had received almost its last kick before being brought out and that a substitute was kindly provided from here though the forming of a club has not yet been attempted.

Anarchy in Burmah.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The Times' advices say complete anarchy prevails in Burmah. It is expected that the Dacoit tribes will storm Mandalay. A very hostile feeling is shown in Burmah toward all foreigners. A general massacre is feared. The Italian consul at Mandalay has been threatened with imprisonment.

MANDALAY, Oct. 19.—Every available armed man has been summoned for service. The Burmese Ministers have decided to stop the British Envoy with the Indian Government's ultimatum at the frontier.

Both Went Back.

Several years ago, there lived in Dardanelle, Arkansas, an eccentric hotel keeper known as—well, say Uncle John. He was violently opposed to the title of governor, declaring that he once knew of a gang of thieves whose pass-word was governor; and on many an occasion guests who thoughtlessly gave him the title, were driven from the house. Commercial travelers "put up" at his hotel. Those who were acquainted with his peculiarities took great delight in assuring drummers who had never before visited the town, that by calling the old man governor, special attentions would be paid. One day Harry Collins, a young drummer for a New York house, decided to visit Dardanelle.

"By all means stop with uncle John Pash," said a companion. "He is the best feeder in the country; and—say, call him governor and he will nearly kill himself waiting on you."

When Collins arrived he was received with a welcome that was delightful to contemplate, and during the course of affable conversation, Collins remarked:

"By the way, governor, how are—"

The old fellow became furious. He had been teased several times that day, and he knew that the title was intended to be an insult. The drummer became angry and swore that he would not stand such abuse.

"Come out here," said the old man. Collins followed and was conducted to the bank of the river, not far away.

"Now," exclaimed the old man, drawing a revolver, "we'll settle this thing. Two of us came down here. Only one of us will go back."

The drummer took out a pistol, half as long as his arm, and remarked:

"I'm going back."

"Well," said the old man, returning his own pistol, and eying the one held by Collins, "I reckon that under the circumstances we'd both better go back."—Arkansaw Traveler.

WIT AND HUMOR.

A crooked man often finds himself in straightened circumstances.

It is said that a good book is the best companion a man can have. This, we imagine, is especially so if it happens to be a bank-book.

Carlyle says: "Laughter means sympathy." This will bring comfort to the man who has inadvertently trodden on a banana peel.

A poet in a contemporary sings: "Darkness creeps about us, as the night is coming on." The truth of the sentiment is at once apparent.

The woman who made a pound of butter out of the cream of a joke, and the cheese from the milk of human kindness, has since washed the close of a year.

Canada is entitled to the name of "The land of the free and the home of the knave." The American knave has too much freedom over there.—Norristown Herald.

A scientific exchange says that a woman can grow seven crops of hair between the ages of 16 and 60. If this is true, why should some of them refuse to allow their husbands to grow more than one crop.—Atlanta Constitution.

"June Bug" sends the following story from Corinth, Ky.:

Hugh, an 8-year-older, and Cecil, a girl of 5, were discussing the efficacy of prayer. Cecil said: "Hugh, if I was to pray right hard to God to have this room papered with nice gold paper by to-morrow morning, He would do it, wouldn't He?"

"I bet you mamma would give a dollar if you would," replied Hugh.

Mamma, however, fearing Cecil's prayer might not be answered, and not wishing her to lose faith; said: "Never mind the paper; ask God to make you a good child, Cecil."

"It's no use, Cecil," broke in Hugh, "to ask Him that. I have been praying for that for eight years, and He hasn't done me any good yet."

A Boston mother, who had taken great care in raising her young hopeful, was much surprised to see him coming home one day with a can of milk.

"Where did you get that Charlie?" she inquired.

"I stole it," frankly answered the boy.

Horrified, the mother exclaimed: "Fie, for shame. What were you going to do with it?"

"Why, steal a purp to feed with it."

A cute little youngster being driven rapidly in a close carriage through a woodlawn to a neighbor's to tea clapped her hands and said: "Auntie, ain't it funny I'm going out to tea and the trees are all going home?"

On Sunday morning, writes S. H. D., while the bells were ringing for church, a 3½ year old was playing in the front yard. The mother was sitting at the window, and to put on a semblance of strict observance of the Sabbath she called her boy to come in. "Oh, mother, mayn't I play out here in the yard a little while?" "No, my son, it is Sunday, and it is wicked to play on Sunday." Willie came in very reluctantly and sat down looking demure and dejected. Some time after the bells stopped ringing Willie's mother said: "My son, if you want to play you can go into the back yard and play." "Yes, but mother, ain't it Sunday in the back yard, too?"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A man in Eastern Arkansaw was arrested on a charge of marrying a girl who was engaged to some one else. "Your Honor," said a lawyer, when the bridegroom had been arraigned, "this man has not violated the law, and I therefore demand his release." "Wan't the girl engaged to John Jackson?" "Yes, sir." "Then Bill Simons must be held." "Under what law Your Honor?" "Under the law of removin' mortgaged property. Take him to jail, Mr. Constable."—Arkansaw Traveler.

A solemn moment: After the marriage of Miss Lillian Sniggs, of Dallas, the bridal party partook of a sumptuous banquet, toward the end of which a younger brother of the bride got up and said, solemnly: "Ladies and gentlemen, I have to propose a toast, which, however, must be drunk standing. Please take your glasses and rise up." The guests, although somewhat bewildered, did so. "Now," said the young scapegrace, "if you will remain standing for a few minutes, I'll find out who has been sitting on my new stove-pipe hat."—Texas Siftings.

Geologists assert that if the continents and the bottom of the ocean were graded down to a uniform level, the whole world would be covered with water a mile deep.

The Chinese have a hard row to hoe. They are barred out of every other country, and now France wants to drive them out of China.

A queer way of procuring drink came up the other day in Waterbury, Conn. A man rushed hurriedly into a drug store, with a scratch on his hand, exclaiming: "For haven's sake give me a drink of whisky immediately. I've been bitten by a dog that acts mad, and I want protection against hydrophobia." He got the drink, but the drug clerk says the game won't work in that shop again.

I referred lately to a case of triplets in Scotland. But this is nothing in comparison with the prolificness of a Russian, according to the following extract from the Scots Magasine, March, 1755: "There was lately presented to the empress of Russia a laboring man who has had two wives, the first of whom brought him four times four children at a birth, seven times thrice, and ten times two. The second wife has lain in seven times; the first time she brought forth three children and the other six times two. The whole number of children by the two wives amount to seventy-two.—London Truth.

Charley wanted to give Clara a Christmas present, but he couldn't make up his mind what it should be; so the next time he called he frankly told her the difficulty under which he was laboring. "Want to make me a present, Charley!" Clara exclaimed in well-disguised astonishment. "Why, Charley, you forget yourself." Charley took the hint and offered himself on the spot.

Before Sailing.

Lean closer, darling, let thy tender heart
Beat against mine that throbs with heavy woe,
Drop thy quiet cheek to rest to soothe thy smart,
Ah me! that I could ease my sorrow so!
But men must work, sweetheart, and women weep
So says the song, so runs the world's behest;
Yet time will pass and tender comfort creep
With hope in company unto thy breast.
Now, ere we part, while yet on lip and cheek
Close kissed linger, clinging passionate,
There is a farewell word love fain would speak,
A tender thought love labors to translate
In earnest words, whose memory through the years
Shall calm thy soul, and dry thy dropping tears.

If in the garden when the roses blow,
Or by the shelter of thine evening fire,
If any winter gloom, or summer glow,
Thy soul finds rearward with a fond desire
Fonder and stronger than thy tender used,
Think thou, "One longs for me across the foam;"
And if, sweet falling like the evening dews,
A special peace enfolds thine heart and home,
Then say thou, dear, with softly bated breath,
"In some lone wilderness beyond the sea,
Whether in light of life, or gloom of death,
My lover's spirit speaks to God for me!"
Kiss me, beloved, without doubt or dread,
We are not murdered, though farewell be said.

Odd Cranks.

Somebody in Mr. Gould's office has been giving the press an idea of the great speculator's correspondence. More than one-half the letters he receives come from beggars or cranks. One man wanted him to make him a present of $30,000 in 4 per cent bonds because they would produce him an income sufficient to maintain him in idleness, and he thought Gould could spare the money easily enough. A man in Central New York sent him photographs of himself, wife, and eleven children and asked permission to take an excursion in his yacht. One man wanted the capitalist to cover a particular stock, and another besought him to depress the price of a certain class of securities on a certain day. Everybody who calls on Gould must state his name, address and business. A clergyman presented himself the other day, and was promptly admitted. When he had seated himself he took out $2,000 in currency and asked that it be invested along with Gould's money in his next "whirl" on the street and that the speculator keep it until it had amounted to $20,000. The proposition was refused, and the preacher withdrew in disgust.

Sharper than a Lawyer.

A wag of a lawyer, says the Iowa State Register, was sitting in his office the other day deeply engaged in unravelling some knotty question, when a gentleman entered and inquired,—

"Is this Mr. Z——?"

The student of Blackstone, raising his eyes from the legal book before him, replied,—

"If you owe me anything, or have any business in my line, then Z——is my name; if you have a claim to present, I am not the man. If you called simply for a social chat, you can call me any name you choose."

"I propose to present you with some business in your line. I have a note of twenty-five dollars, which I want you to collect."

So saying, he handed the lawyer a note, and departed to call again the next day. As soon as he was gone the lawyer ascertained that it was one of his own promises to pay.

The next day his client again appeared, and inquired,—

"Well, what success?"

"All right; I have collected the money. Here it is, less my fees," handing him fifteen dollars.

"Good!" said the client. "I have made two dollars and a half by this operation.

"How so?" said the lawyer.

"Well," replied the client, "I tried all over the city to sell your note for twelve dollars and a half, and couldn't do it"

Absent-Minded.

We talk of genius and talent; but what are these but the power which some men have of putting their whole mind into what they do? Doubtless men have special gifts; but those would be worthless unless they gave their best thought to the present work. That was what the artist meant who, being asked with what he mixed his colors, replied, "with brains." I read yesterday, two statements; one was that there was a scythe factory in New England which turns out 14,000 dozen scythes a year, and the President of the company tempers all the scythes that leave his works, because no other man can do it so well. The other fact stated is that there is another man so famous for making knife-blades that a knife with a blade of his workmanship is double in value. These facts illustrate my thesis that we must put our whole mind into our work in order to do it well; the active human intellect being superior to all machinery, all mere training and all mechanical habit. Genius and talent are nothing without application, and application means putting mind into work.—James Freeman Clarke

In January last a good old-fashioned dealer in dry good, groceries, hardware, and pretty much everything else, in the central portion of the State, decided to take an inventory for the first time in twenty-one years. About the time it was completed a commercial traveler for a house in this city happened along and asked him how he came out.

"Well, it's kinder dubious," was the reply.

"How?"

"Why, I fell short of my estimate of stock by about $3,000."

"And you don't know how to make your figures come out even?"

"I confess I don't."

"Well, all you have to do is to mark everything up 20 per cent."

"Gineral Jackson!" gasped the old man; "but I kicked around in bed for three straight nights and never thought of that. That's the way, of course, and up goes the price of caliker and flat-irons."—Wall Street News.

"Yes," said a lady complacently; "I expect we'll get rich now. My husband has just been appointed one of the receivers of an embarrassed savings bank."

"John," said the teacher, "I'm very sorry to have to punish you." "Then don't; I'll let you off this time," responded John.

"What is the worst thing about riches?" asked the Sunday school superintendent. And the new boy said, "Not having any."

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Prepare For Winter.

Gentlemen will find a large range of wearing apparel at the "Golden Lion." Overcoats, Persian Lamb Caps, Scotch Caps, Shirts and Drawers, Buck Mitts, Gloves, &c. Tailoring done with neatness and dispatch, from a large selection of Overcoating, Scotch Tweeds, &c. Go to FAIR, VANEVERY & Co., for your outfit.

What They are Saying.

The lyrical inquiry, "What are the wild waves saying, "has never been satisfactorily answered, but when it is asked what is the Wild orator saying? the answer is that Dr. Wild will say a thousand interesting things in his lecture, on "A Masonic Mystery," in the Opera House, on Wednesday evening, October 28th.

Wallace Wins.

Messrs. G. T. Blackstock and Wallace Nesbitt, who were opponents at the recent assises here were the candidates for the presidency of the Osgoode Legal and Literary Society, the election for which office took place on Saturday evening in St. Vincent de Paul Hall, Toronto. Mr. Blackstock has held the office for two years, and was very popular, but a third term was opposed by many of the members, and Mr. Nesbitt was elected.

The Tonic Sol-fa Method.

Mr. Edward Duff, Hazel Brae, who holds a certificate for proficiency in the knowledge of vocal music on the tonic sol-fa method, intends to conduct a class for children through the winter. The first meeting will be held on Friday evening next in the Sunday school room of the Murray-street Baptist Church, at half-past seven. A nominal admission fee of 10 cents will be charged. Further particulars may be obtained on application to Mr. Duff, at Dr. Barnardo's Home, "Hazel Brae.

"The Teachers' Convention."

We notice a communication in last evening's Review over the signature of Wm. Beattie, Secretary of the Peterborough Teachers' Association, and one of the teachers in the Central School. In it he entirely misinterprets the object of a resolution of the School Board, fixing a penalty on teachers absenting themselves from their duties without a reasonable excuse, and without the permission of the School Board. We are quite certain that the resolution was not directed against the "Teachers' Institute," as he wishes us to believe, but, on the contrary, was levelled against those teachers who, on absurd and frivolous excuses, absent themselves from their duties. Mr. Beattie, if he knows anything, must be aware that if the Teachers' Institute here was properly organised, the School Board would have no option but to allow the teachers to attend the sessions in accordance with the law, and when Mr. Beattie seeks to misrepresent the action of the Board to the Minister of Education, on official information, we rather think that his information was superficial instead of official, for it would be utterly impossible for Mr. Beattie to get any accurate information except through the Board, and the Board have never as yet officially stated that the object in passing the resolution was as Mr. Beattie has written. Both the mover and seconder of the resolution, and, in fact, the whole Board, have always treated the teachers with great consideration and liberality, but they are determined that henceforth the teachers shall not run the Board, as has been heretofore attempted, but that all actions of the teachers, as public officials, shall be carefully watched and the rights of the taxpayers and children more strictly protected. We think that when teachers have about three months vacation in a year, they might substract at least two days from the last part of the summer vacation, in order to have mutual intercourse with one another and to hold a Teachers' Institute, and not upset the attendance of over one thousand school children, as now, and demoralize to a certain extent the school system. If two months in summer and two weeks at Christmas are not sufficient holidays, we would advocate for extending vacations two days, thereby enabling them to attend the Convention, held at these periods without any inconvenience to either themselves or the school children.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Class.

To-night is the opening of the young men's class for Bible study, in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. All interested are requested to note this fact.

Gunners Attention.

There will be a meeting of the Peterborough Gun club at eight o'clock this evening in the rooms of the Telephone Co'y., for the transaction of important business. A large attendance of members is requested.

Scott Act Meeting.

A meeting of the Scott Act workers will be held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall on Wednesday, 28th October, at 2:30 p.m., for the purpose of organizing for the strict enforcement of the Act after it comes into effect. All gentlemen willing to help in this matter, in town or county, are invited to attend.

Mr. Earl's Class.

Mr. Barton Earl's ladies' class, in the critical reading of English literature, will reassemble next week for the fall and winter term. The preliminary meeting will be held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms on Tuesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock. All ladies desirous of joining are wishing to join are respectfully requested to attend.

The Revising Barristers.

At a Cabinet Council meeting held at Ottawa yesterday afternoon, the appointments of Revising Barristers were made. Judge Dennistoun was appointed for both ridings of Peterborough, and County Judge, J. M. Clarke, for both ridings of Northumberland; Victoria South, Judge W. W. Deane; Victoria North, Adam Hudspeth, Barrister. Durham East and West, T. M. Benson, County Judge.

Grading the Fair Grounds.

The exhibition grounds were yesterday the scene of busy action, teams and men being busily at work all day in levelling off the inequalities that exist, so that another year a more level surface will be presented. The following directors of the Association each furnished a team of horses:—Dr. Kincaid, Messrs. J. Garbutt, Hugh Davidson, G. W. Fitzgerald and William Collins. Mr. Joseph Redmond was the only person beside the directors who assisted by sending a team.

Rowdyism Rampant.

A resident of Ashburnham having occasion to call in the services of a doctor, at an early hour on Monday morning, was proceeding along George street for that purpose, and when between Hunter and Brock street, was attacked by a gang of cowardly ruffians, who almost tore the coat off his back in the assault. Had he not been an unusually muscular man he would have been seriously maltreated, but as it was, fought his way through the cowardly crew and accomplished his mission.

"The Silver King."

This fine play will be produced at Bradburn's Opera House this evening by Harry Miner's fine company. Mrs. Hattie Warner, who has been called the New Jersey Lily on account of her great beauty, plays the part of Nellie Denver. This lady, who is a native of Paterson, N.J., has caused a sensation wherever she has appeared, not only by her beauty and finished acting, but by the costliness and magnificence of her costumes and jewelry, which are said to be extremely beautiful. The company is a good one throughout, and a first-class performance of this highly popular drama may be looked for. Reserved seat plan at Menzies.

Peterborough Philharmonic Society.

A meeting was held last evening in Mr. J. S. Parker's rooms, over Hartley's music store, of those interested in music and desirous of forming a Philharmonic Society. There was a large turn-out of both sexes, and a great deal of interest was manifested in the project. It was resolved, on motion of Mr. B. Tate, that the management of the society should devolve jointly on Messrs. Hampshire and Parker, organists of St. John's and St. Paul's churches. The season will consist of the month's between the present time and April, and the fee will be, for gentlemen $1.50, for ladies $1.00, for that term. The first rehearsal of the society will take place on Thursday, October 22nd (inst.), and the music taken up will be Dr. Stainer's "Widow of Nairn," which has been selected for the first concert of the society. They will also practice a number of glees and part songs. Large numbers of ladies and gentlemen have signified their intention of becoming members, and it is confidently expected that the society will have not less than 60 voices to start with. There is no doubt that under the able management of Messrs. Hampshire and Parker the society will become a source of credit to the town, and pleasure and profit to its members. Ladies or gentlemen desiring to become members should lose no time in doing so before the first rehearsal.

What they are Saying.

I'm the Revising Barrister.—His Honor.

And we're left.—Chorus of disappointed junior lawyers.

Never mind, I'll get the Post Office site.—Cam.

We're managers of the Philharmonic.—The musical saints, Paul and John.

And I'm the treasurer.—Bert.

We never met with more gentlemanly football players than the Peterboroughs.—The Ottawa men in the Citizen.

What We May Expect.

Meeting of the Gun Club to-night.

A Large audience to see the Silver King to-night.

Concert in aid of the Protestant Home on Thursday evening.

Cloudy to rainy weather, with winds shifting to the west and north-west, and increasing to gales in most places. Colder weather towards night.

What We Would Like to See.

Rampart rowdyism repressed.

The new town building ready for the new Town Council.

A full house at the concert in aid of the Protestant Home on Thursday evening. Brightening skies.

A Growing Boy.

"That Hose."

We are in receipt of a long communication from Mr. J. W. Humphrey, agent of the Gutta Percha Rubber Manufacturing Company, Toronto, on the interminable hose question. The contents of the letter are of no particular interest to the public, and our space is too valuable to be devoted to the literary squabbles of two rival hose companies. The town is interested in getting good hose, and the counter accusations of both companies have had considerable space in these columns. The position of THE EXAMINER is simply this. If the town has a guarantee from the Canada Rubber Company, it should insist on the conditions of that guarantee being [illegible] town has 1,500 feet of good hose, it is not the place of a rival hose agent to condemn it the town council is the responsible party. If the town requires new hose, let the matter be introduced into open council and publicly discussed on its merits, and let the best and cheapest hose be procured. The town does not require a large length of hose lying in the engine house waiting for couplings. No matter how good it is, it is useless without proper couplings, and the work of changing 200 or 300 couplings to fit other hose, would doubtless result in the damage of a large percentage of them.

—JUDICIAL—

SALE OF FARM LAND

In the Township of Otonabee,

within six miles of the Town of Peterborough

Under and by virtue of a judgment of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, and in the Chancery Division thereof, made in the action of HARTLEY et al., vs. BEAVIS et al., and dated the Fourth day of September, A.D., 1885, there will be offered for sale, with the approval of the Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Peterborough, at his Chambers, in the said Town of Peterborough on

Saturday, 7th day of Nov'r, 1885

at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon, the following valuable farm property viz:—

The West Half of Lot Number 29, in the 10th Concession of the said Township of Otonabee, containing one hundred acres more or less.

Upon the said property there are about 25 acres of hardwood land, the remainder thereof being cleared and under cultivation.

There are upon the said premises two barns and a log dwelling house, with woodshed attached, and a never-failing well. One of said barns is frame, 40 feet x 30 feet; the other a post barn, 50 feet x 27 feet; the said dwelling house is 20 feet x 20 feet. The soil is clay or clay loam, and well adapted for raising wheat and other grains, and the property is situated in a first-class farming locality, within six miles of the Town of Peterborough.

The said premises will be sold subject to a lease thereof to Samuel Heatherly and John Heatherly, the Lessees therein mentioned, which has one year to run from 1st March, 1886, at a yearly rental of $180.00 per annum, and which said list contains a provision that the purchaser of said premises may determine the said lease upon giving to the Lessees one month's notice in writing, and paying to said Lessees the value of any crops then upon said premises, and whatever ploughing he may have done on said premises; and a reasonable sum to pay the expenses of removal from said premises. Said lands shall also be sold subject to the condition that the current year's rent, due upon the 28th Feby, 1886, shall be paid to the new owners of said lands.

TERMS:

Ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Vendor's Solicitors at the time of the sale, and the balance of the purchase money within 30 days thereafter without interest.

Other terms and conditions will be the standing conditions of the Court.

For other terms and particulars, apply gratis to Messrs. Hatton & Wood, Barristers, Peterborough, or E. A. Peck, Esquire, Barrister, Peterborough.

Dated at Peterborough, this 29th Sept., 1885.

THE BUILDING BOOM.

The Town Growing Steadily.

Operations of the Year.

We give below a contribution of the record of building operations:

WATER STREET.

Mr. Adam Dawson has put up for Mr. A. Comstock a neat two story red brick residence, 24 x 36, containing nine rooms with halls and closets.—Cost $2,000.

Mr. A. Dawson has put up for Mr. Regan corner of George, two dwellings, one two story brick, 22 x 30, with halls and seven rooms; the other, 20 x 28, one story, five rooms, etc.—Cost $1,500.

GEORGE STREET.

Mr. Cox has put in in the Cox block two excellent offices. One is for the Toronto Real Estate Investment Company's offices, and the other is for the Canada Central Loan and Savings Company's offices. In the rear are Mr. Cox's private office, and the office for his steward, Mr. J. C. T. Lacey. Both offices are provided with strong fire-proof vaults, and the fittings are superb. Improvements made under the superintendence of Mr. ames J McClennan.—Cost $2,000.

Mr. Cox has also put new felt and gravel roofs on the shops occupied by Mr. Wm. Ruth and Misses Sanderson and Jenkins. Also a new roof on Mr. James Best's shop.—Cost $350.

Mr. Adam Dawson has erected for Mr. Wm. Langford a two story red brick tenement, 24 x 36, containing 7 rooms with halls.—Cost $1,600.

HUNTER STREET.

On this street Mr. Cox has metamorphosed the Darcy Block completely. The third floor has been fitted up finely for the Peterborough Business College. The second floor has been converted into offices, the front of which are occupied by Messrs. Stone & Masson. On the ground floor two single stores have been fitted up, one occupied by Mr. J. McCrea as a drug store, and one by Mr. Brisbin as a flour and feed store. Both have plate glass fronts. Work superintended by Mr. Jas. McClennan. Cost, $1,100.

SIMCOE STREET.

Mr. Geo. A. Cox has made extensive improvements, under the supervision of Mr. Jas. McClennan, to the Dixon estate stores. They have been improved outside, thoroughly refitted internally, and the needed outbuildings erected. Cost, $1,000.

Mr. Cox has made extensive alterations and aditions to the residence on the Claxton property at the head of this street. The brick portion has been entirely remodelled inside, and a fine kitchen wing, 2 stories in height, added. This portion, to which a bay window and verandah have been added, contains twelve rooms, with halls, bath rooms, closets, etc. The roughcast portion has been thoroughly rebuilt, veneered with brick, another story added, and a two story kitchen wing put up. A fine new verandah extends on three sides of it. It contains 12 rooms, with spacious halls, baths, closets, etc. Both residences are heated by hot air furnaces. The contractor for the brickwork was Mr. John Carlisle, James McClennan superintending the carpentry. Cost, $4,000.

HUNTER STREET.

A three story red brick building of imposing appearance, containing three fine stores, with plate glass windows, and the upper floor divided into offices, has been finished this year by Mr. J. Lynch. The building, which adds much to the appearance of the street, was erected under the superintendence of Mr. R. Clinkscale, at a cost of $5,000.

STEWART STREET.

Mr. A. Dawson has built for Mr. H. Regan a red brick 1½ story cottage 20x28, with kitchen wing 14x16. Mr. H. C. Stabler carpentry. Cost, $1,000.

Mr. W. B. Ferguson has had erected by Mr. Dawson, a neat two-story red brick tenement residence. Contains eight rooms with closets, halls, etc. Thos. Irwin carpentry. Cost, $1,000.

Mr. Wm. Smith has had built by Mr. A. Dawson, a two-story brick dwelling, 34x36, containing seven rooms, with closets, hall, etc. Mr. A. Rutherford carpentry. Cost, $2,000.

MAPLE AVENUE,

In rear of the Barnardo Home, has had erected on it a two story red brick tenement residence, by Mr. J. Kincaid, for the Toronto Real Estate Investment Company. Seven rooms and halls. Cost, $1,400.

DUBLIN STREET.

Mr. William Spear has had erected at the corner of this street a story and a half brick house, 22x30, with gable roof. Bricklaying by Mr. J. J. Hartley; Mr. William Spear, carpenter. Cost, $1,000.

TOWNSEND STREET.

[illegible] 20, with kitchen, 14x16, have been put up by Mr. James McNamara, at a cost of $1,600. The brickwork was done by Mr. McNamara himself, and the carpentry under his supervision.

BLYTHE WOOLLEN MILLS.

Extensive alterations and improvements have been made to this property, a new front having been added, new machinery put in, and a good deal of refitting done. The masonry was done by Mr. J. J. Hartley. The cost of improvements is about $2,000.

BETHUNE STREET.

A commodious and handsome two story house of white brick is in course of erection on this street for Mr. Maud. It will be 32x36 feet, with kitchen 18x24. Mr. J. J. Hartley is the contractor and bricklayer. Estimated cost, $2,500.

LOCK STREET.

Here a red brick one story cottage, 16x20, has been built by Mr. C. L. Gordon, for Miss Grady, at a cost of $300.

LAKE STREET.

Two frame houses, 20x30, two stories high, have been built for Mr. L. De Rochers, Toronto, by Mr. C. Gordon. Cost, $1,300.

BETHUNE STREET.

The most important addition to the buildings of the town this year is the stove works buildings erected on this street by Mr. Geo. A. Cox, for the Powell & Jones stove company. The size of the structure is as follows: main building, three stories in height, 80x65, with felt and gravel roof, wing two stories in height, 43x50, covered with galvanized iron; moulding shop, 80x65, roofed with Canada plate. These solid and handsome buildings have before been fully described in the EXAMINER. Brickwork, Mr. J. J. Hartley; carpentry superintended by Mr. James McClennan. Cost,

LONDON STREET.

Quite an important addition to this street is the new terrace at the corner of George street, just finished by Messrs. Star and Baptie. It consists of five eight roomed houses, and a broad verandah, ascended by steps, runs the entire length of it. The scroll work and supports of this verandah are of very neat design, and being appropriately painted, add much to the appearance of the houses. Excellent arrangements are made at the back in the way of sheds for fuel, etc., which are reached by a lane which obviates the necessity of taking anything through the houses from the front. The brickwork was done by Mr. J. J. Hartley, the woodwork by Mr. J.D. Baptie. Estimated $7,000.

Mr. John Kincaid has put up a two-story red brick house at the corner of Harvey street, 22x18 with a lateral extension of 10x18. Cost $1,700.

CHARLOTTE STREET.

A brick block two stories high, with mansard roof, the upper part to be used as a dwelling and the lower as a store, has been built for Mr. S. Harper. The dimensions of the block are 27 feet frontage, running back 42 feet. Mr. W. Fitzgerald is the contractor, and Mr. P. J. McNamara, the bricklayer. Cost, $1,800.

In the skating rink a roller rink floor containing 30,000 feet of hard maple flooring, was laid down for the lessee, Mr. E. Brown, by Mr. T. Rutherford last spring, at a cost of $1,000.

Mr. Giles Webber has placed an additional story to his residence on this street, replacing the flat roof of galvanized iron with a ridge roof, the shingles laid in mortar. Mr. Jos. Sawdye, brickwork. Cost, $275.

Mr. J. W. McBain has added an extension to his grain ware house for office and store room. The work was done by Mr. George Elliott at a cost of about $300.

ROMAINE STREET.

A red brick story and a half house with ridge roof has been built on this street for Mr. J. Guerin by Mr. C. Gordon, at a cost of $750.

DALHOUSIE STREET.

There has been built on this street a short distance from George, and on the south side a two story and a half white brick house, for Mr. Huffman, at a cost of $1,000. W. Huffman was the contractor, and Mr. J. Carlisle the mason.

DOWNIE STREET.

A two story red brick house, 28 x 30 has been erected for Mr. W. Hamilton, by Mr. Wm. Wand, at a cost of $1,200; brick work by Mr. J. J. Hartley.

THE BARNARDO HOME.

An addition of two stories has been made to this institution, consisting of laundry and scullery on the ground floor, dining, washing and bed room on the upper story. The work was supervised by Mr. Wm. Fitzgerald, and Mr. J. J. Hartley did the brick work.—Cost $1,000.

RACE STREET.

The Dickson estate are rapidly bringing to completion their new factory building, just north of Brodie's Mills. It is a four story frame building, with stone foundations, and designed to be let in portions, with power, to manufacturers of various kinds. A new flume and tail race have been constructed for the purpose of supplying the necessary power. Estimated cost of the work, $4,000.

M'DONNEL STREET.

Mr. J. P. Thornton has put up a new frame butcher shop at a cost of $180, and improved his other property to the extent of $164.

RUBIDGE STREET.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on this street at the head of Brock is rapidly approaching completion. It is a very handsome structure of white brick with stone facing built on the amphitheatrical plan with a dished floor, and its details are most complete and convenient. Mr. J. Douglas is the contractor and the cost is estimated at $20,000.

WESCOTT STREET.

On this street Mr. William Yelland has built two small brick houses, a story and a half high, containing 7 rooms each. The brickwork was done by Mr. J. J. Hartley, and the woodwork by Mr. L. Dobbin. Cost, about $1,400.

Two red brick houses, of two stories, have been built on this street for Mrs. Allin. Mr. J. J. Hartley was the contractor for the brickwork, and Mr. Wm. Wand for the carpentering. The cost of erection was $2,400.

AYLMER STREET.

Mr. W. H. Watson's residence on this street was completed early in the spring. It is a commodious and handsome building of red brick 36x28, with five bay windows, and has a kitchen at the back 22x29. Mr. T. Rutherford was the contractor and the bricklaying is by Mr. P. J. McNamara. Cost, $2,500.

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.

This fine building has been in the hands of busy workmen all summer, and has not yet been completed. The new abutments have been put in, the roof of the nave taken off and one of higher pitch of galvanized iron put on, and a lofty new spire built on top of the tower. Alterations have also been made in the windows, which are at present being glazed with stained glass, and plasterers are at work in the interior. The whole of the exterior that was not restored last year has also been dressed and re-pointed. The mason work is by Mr. James Bogue, and Mr. J. Carveth is the contractor for erecting the spire. Is is estimated that the work done this year will cost $17,000.

ALBERT STREET.

Mr. J. Bryson has built a neat story and a half brick house 20x30, with kitchen 16x22. Mr. P. J. McNamara contractor; cost, $250.

Personnel of the Government.

The following passage occurs in the speech of Sir Richard Cartwright, delivered at Lucknow last Friday. In the face of the facts therein set forth, how can the people of Canada expect honest government?:—

"I charge here, as I have charged elsewhere, that the present Government and its supporters at Ottawa are grossly corrupt. I am not charging them with political mistakes. I charge them with gross, continuous personal corruption in their own proper persons. Members of Parliament stand in the position of trustees for the nation, and the Government are the attorneys for the trustees. It is a primary principle in law which common sense, equity, and justice combine in declaring that the trustee must have no dealings with the property of the person for whom he is acting. In order to give force to that principle, we have put upon the Statute Book what is called the Independence of Parliament Act, but some seventy of Sir John's supporters have driven not one coach-and-six, but seventy coaches and six, through that statute which declares that the trustee is not to deal with the property of his ward. They have unlawfully possessed themselves of timber limits, of leases of coal areas, of leases of ranches; they have received interests—whether "blind shares" or not in colonization companies; or they are paid officers of the C.P.R., or they are interested in railway subsidies—the last and worst means of corruption which Sir John has devised. Turning to the Treasury bench we find not less than who have obtained dishonest personal advantages by means of political influence. First, and perhaps worst, is Mr. John Henry Pope—a man who being in a double and special sense your trustee, asked for hundreds of thousands of dollars, and got them out of the public treasury to aid him in building a railway through the State of Maine, in which he is the principal director. Following close on his heels comes Mr. Chapleau, who is President of a subsidized railway, in which he is believed to be largely interested, which has also obtained a large grant from the public treasury. We come next to Sir Hector Langevin, Minister of Public Works—a man on whose nod it depends whether a contractor shall be ruined or shall make a fortune out of the contract. We find that Sir Hector received a testimonial of many thousands of dollars subscribed by those contractors who are to come before him in order that he may settle what sums they are to receive for "extras." Mr. Costigan also has received a testimonial" largely subscribed by men who have favour to ask at his hands. Nor is one of the latest acquisitions to the Ministerial ranks (Mr. White) a bit behind, for ever since 1878 the Montreal Gazette, of which Mr. Thos White is the principal proprietor, has been drawing from $4,000 to $19,000 a year out of the public treasury for special printing jobs done by him at prices three, four, and even fourteen fold in excess of the rates which would be paid to the Government printers. This habit of granting "testimonials" to Ministers in office opens the door to all manner of bribery and corruption; it is distinctly wrong and dishonorable; it is perhaps worse than for a suitor in court to make a present to the judge on the bench. How is a Minister who has received a present from a contractor to sit in judgment upon his claim? Unless he is something either above or below a man, he must recognize the claims of the contractor. He admitted that a great many claims were made upon public men, but he did not consider that this was a justification for the reception of such testimonials, a thing which was utterly wrong in principle.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

Financially Canada, to quote the classic language of Wilkins Micawber, is going to the "demnition bow-wows." To show this clearly, the following facts and figures are given on the authority of Sir Richard Cartwright, the ablest financial authority in Canada. Figures are usually dry reading, but it is necessary that the elector should study them a little. The fact that the taxpayer has to sweat to pay the taxes made necessary by the extravagance of the present Government, takes away, to a great extent, the element of dryness. The following figures are worthy of careful study by every elector, and show how rapidly the country is driving on to the rocks of financial disaster under the reckless reach of the present administration.

The total annual expenditure of the Do-

The said expenditure had increased to $23,316,316 in 1874, being an increase of $9,830,224 in the seven years from 1st July, 1867, to 1st July, 1874.

The expenditure was $23,503,156 in 1878, being an increase of $186,842 in the four years from 1st July, 1874, to 1st July, 1878.

The expenditure for 1st July, 1884, was $31,187,706.

It was estimated by the Minister of Finance that the expenditure for the year ending 1st July, 1885, would amount to $32,-850,000, irrespective of any expenditure incurred in suppressing the revolt in the North-West.

The taxation of the people has increased as follows:

From	$11,700,661	in	1868.
To	20,120,185	in	1874.
To	17,841,938	in	1878.
To	25,483,199	in	1884.

The gross debt of Canada has increased as follows:

From	$ 93,046,061	in	1867.
To	141,153,155	in	1874.
To	174,957,268	in	1878.
To	258,711,088	up to	31st

May, 1885, independently of many liabilities for which provision must be made shortly.

The increase in the expenditure during Mr. Mackenzie's term of office was less than $200,000, less than one-fiftieth part of the increase of nearly ten millions incurred during the previous seven years of Conservative rule. The expenditure for the past year would probably amount to not less than thirty-four or thirty-five millions, and the liabilities ascertained to exist, though not yet included in the debt, would increase it to $292,000,000. When Sir Richard made these statements in Parliament, not a man on the Treasury benches was able to deny the facts he had stated, for the simple reason that every one of those facts was drawn from the public accounts and from public statements made by these gentlemen themselves. In order to see what great opportunities these men had thrown away, it is only required to compare our position with that of the neighbouring Republic, and to take a view of both in 1867 and at the present time. The Americans are our great rivals. Intending settlers at once draw a comparison between Canada and the United States.

In 1867 the population of Canada was 3,375,000; we had to pay taxes amounting to a little over $11,000,000; and we had a gross debt of $93,000,000; the population to-day, excluding Indians, is 4,300,000; we have a taxation necessary to pay our ordinary expenses of $27,000,000. And that taxation is so levied that a very much larger sum than it represents is taken from the pockets of the people to fill those of certain favoured persons and corporations.

The United States in 1867, just emerging from a great civil war, had a population of	36,000,000
Their debt was	$2,773,000,000
Their taxatirn, reduced to a gold basis, amounted as nearly as possible to	400,000,000
In 1885 the population of the United States, as estimated by good judges, was considerably in excess of	56,000,000
Their debt deducting cash in the treasury	1,400,000,000
And the sum total that they raised by taxation was estimated at	216,000,000
Of which	100,000,000
or thereabouts was applied in reduction of their debt, what they really need to raise being	100.000,000

In 1867 our debt was $28 per head, our taxation was $30 per head. In 1885 our debt is $70 per head or $350 per family. Our nominal taxes are $6 per head, and if one takes into account the money that goes into the pockets of certain favoured persons, and not into the treasury, our real taxation will be found to be not one penny less than $5 per head, and although it may be true that the American taxes are levied on an equally false system, recollect that in 1867 taxes were levied upon a proper principle, whereas now we have lost that advantage. Now we are merely taxed at the rate of $9 per head for general purposes, but we are obliged to subsidize many Government favorites, and for this purpose pay out many millions more. We have reversed the positions of the two countries. The American debt of $80 per head has been reduced to $28 per head. The American taxation of $11 per head has been reduced to a taxation of $3.30 per head. That is the necessary taxation; although in order to reduce their debt they choose to tax themselves at the rate of $5 per head. It is not simply that we are in as bad a position as the United States were after four years of civil war; the positions have been exactly reversed. The Americans stand in as good a position, so far as necessary taxation is concerned, as the Canadians stood eighteen years ago; the Canadians to-day, after twelve years of Sir John A. Macdonald's rule, stand exactly as the Americans stood after four years of civil war. These startling figures are presented on the authority of the ablest financier in Canada, and the sooner the keys of the Treasury are placed by the people in his custody, the sooner will the terrible leaks that are sinking the ship of state be closed.

ELM GROVE STOCK FARM.

A Visit to the Stock-Raising Establishment of Mr. Jos. Redmond.

Sale of High Grade Cattle.

A representative of the EXAMINER to-day drove out to Elm Grove, the extensive stock farm of Mr. Joseph Redmond, where an important sale of Durham cattle, Clyde horses, Berkshire pigs, and other high class stock was in progress. The farm, which consists of some five hundred acres of arable and pasture land, is situated in the township of Otonabee, about four miles from Peterborough. The house, a large and handsome brick structure of modern design, probably the finest farm house in the county, stands upon a little eminence facing the road leading to Keene, and commands an extensive view of the surrounding country. To the left of it, and separated from it by a spac-

INER representative arrived, was being rapidly filled up by the vehicles of the numerous farmers and dealers in stock attending the sale, stand two very large barns, joining each other at right angles. Each of them is 126x146 feet, and they are jointly capable of housing 101 cattle, exclusive of horse stabling and ample accommodation for hay and roots, and the appliances necessary to converting them into food for the cattle. The barns are built on the side of a hill, so that, although on one side the bay of the barn can be driven into from the yard, there is beneath a kind of basement, so to speak, in which are the quarters for the stock. This basement is built of solid stone, while from it upward the buildings are frame, with the exception of a recent addition used for stabling, which is of brick. Above the roof is a cupola surmounted by a tin fish whose unfishlike duty seems to be indicating which way the wind blows.

Joining a party of sturdy yeomen who were being shown around by Mr. Redmond, who, by the way, is as witty, and can tell as good a story as any of his quick-witted countrymen, the EXAMINER representative was led down a short flight of steps into the stable. There, in addition to several well fed teams which were placidly munching away at their oats, was found Mr. Redmond's famous Clydesdale mare that won first prize at the Toronto Fair; and a couple of fine looking black yearling fillies. The party were then conducted to that part of the basement devoted to neat stock. Here were found a large number of plump, handsome, clean-looking heifer and bull calves, heifers and young bulls, the get of such famous sires as Banner Bearer, High Sheriff 4th, Dandy and other noted trans-atlantic and Canadian prize-winners, and many of them already prize-winners at local shows themselves. The arrangement for feeding and watering in these stalls is most ingenious and convenient. All the turnips, hay, chopped stuff, etc., for the animals' use is prepared on the floor above, a horse-power engine being used for supplying power to grind and chop the food. This is conveyed by means of shoots to the basement, so that the handling is reduced to a minimum. At the back of the mangers runs a water trough which is supplied through pipes with water pumped from a well by the same horse-power utilized in preparing the food, so that there is no necessity to take the cattle out to water, and at the back of the mangers are alleyways, from which the mangers are filled. At the far end of the building were found a number of fine Berkshire hogs that seemed to find great favor in the eyes of the critical visitors. Returning to the upper portion of the barn the party came to the part in which the horsepower is located, where, also, was to be seen the feed cutter. Off this again were the feed bins, connecting by shoots with the regions below, and a mow well-filled with hay, oats, straw, etc. In another part of the barn was stalled a handsome young black Clydesdale stallion, two years old, one of the horses offered for sale.

A walk across the yard brought the party to the orchard, where a couple of strong looking young Clydesdale stallions were seen installed in a shed. Adjoining this, again, came the piggery, where a lot of fine Berkshire sows and pigs were making themselves comfortable. In this department, too, every arrangement is made to facilitate feeding and watering; but, notwithstanding all the labor-saving devices adopted, it takes a staff of eight or ten men, all the year round, to attend to the farm and stock.

Mr. Redmond takes a just pride in his fine farm and splendid stock, and when it is told that 31 years ago, when he built his first house, a short distance from the present fine building, he had only $1,100, it will not be wondered at, for the property, buildings and belongings could hardly be bought now for one hundred times that amount. He is contemplating a visit to the old country for the purpose of making heavy investments in thoroughbred Scotch cattle, and it was in order to make room for these that he decided on selling off a part of his present valuable and well-bred stock.

The representative of THE EXAMINER left before the sale was fairly under way, but there was a large attendance of buyers, and there seemed to be every prospect of lively bidding.

Window's Towards Jerusalem.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached on Sunday Morning, October 4th, 1885.

"His windows being open in his chamber towards Jerusalem."—DAN. 6: 10.

The scoundrelly princes of Persia, urged on by political jealousy against Daniel, have succeeded in getting a law passed that whosoever prays to God shall be put under the paw and teeth of the lions, who are lashing themselves in rage and hunger up and down the stone cage, or putting their lower jaw on the ground, bellowing till the earth trembles. But did not hinder the devotions of Daniel, the Courde-Lion of the ages. His enemies might as well have a law that the sun should not draw water or that the south wind should not sweep across a garden of magnolias or that God should be abolished. They could not scare him with the red-hot furnaces, and they cannot now scare him with the lions. As soon as Daniel hears of this enactment he leaves his office of Secretary of State, with its upholstery of crimson and gold, and comes down the white marble steps and goes to his own house. He opens his window and puts the shutters back and pulls the curtain aside so that he can look towards the sacred city of Jerusalem, and then prays.

I suppose the people in the street gathered under and before his window, and said: "Just see that man defying the law; he ought to be arrested." And the constabulary of the city rush to the police headquarters and report that Daniel is on his knees at the wide-open window. "You are my prisoner," says the officer of the law, dropping a heavy hand on the shoulder of the kneeling Daniel. As the constables open the door of the cavern to thrust in their prisoner, they see the glaring eyes of the monsters. But Daniel becomes the first lion-tamer, and they lick his hand and fawn at his feet, and that night he sleeps with the shaggy mane of a wild beast for his pillow, while the king that night, sleepless in the palace, has on him the paw and teeth of a lion he cannot tame—the lion of a remorseful conscience.

THE ROYAL VISIT.

What a picture it would be for some artist, Darius, in the early dusk of morning, not waiting for footman or chariot, hastening to the den, all flushed and nervous and in dishabille, and looking through the crevices of the cage to see what had become of his Prime-minister! "What, no sound!" he says; "Daniel is surely devoured, and the lions are sleeping after their horrid meal, the bones of the poor man scattered across the floor of the cavern." With trembling voice Darius calls out, "Daniel!" No answer, for the prophet is yet in profound slumber. But a lion, more easily awakened, advances, and, with hot breath blown through the crevice, seems angrily to demand the cause of this interruption, and then another wild beast lifts his mane from under Daniels head, and the prophet, waking up, comes forth to report himself all unhurt and well.

DANIEL'S PATRIOTISM.

But our text stands us at Daniel's window open toward Jerusalem. Why in that direction open? Jerusalem was his native land, and all the pomp of his Babylonish successes could not make him forget it. He came there from Jerusalem at eighteen years of age, and he never visited it, though he lived to be eighty-five years. Yet when he wanted to arouse the deepest emotions and grandest aspirations of his heart he had his window open towards his native Jerusalem. There are many of you to-day who understand that without any exposition.

TOWARD HOME.

This is getting to be a nation of foreigners. They have come into all occupations and professions. They sit in all churches. It may be twenty years ago since you got your naturalization papers, and you may be thoroughly Americanized, but you can't forget the land of your birth, and your warmest sympathies go out toward it. Your windows are open toward Jerusalem. Your father and mother are buried there. It may have been a very humble house in which you were born, but your memory often plays around it, and you hope some day to go and see it—the hill, the tree, the brook, the house, the place so sacred, the door from which you started off with parental blessing to make your own way in the world; and God only knows how sometimes you have longed to see the familiar places of your childhood, and how in awful crisis of life you would like to have caught a glimpse of the old wrinkled face that bent over you as you lay on the gentle lap twenty or forty or fifty years ago. You may have on this side the sea risen in fortune, and, like Daniel, have become great and may have come into prosperities which you never could have reached if you had stayed there, and you may have many windows to your house—bay windows and sky-light windows and windows of conservatory and windows on all sides—but you have at least one window open toward Jerusalem.

POST-OFFICE WINDOWS.

When the foreign steamer comes to the wharf you see the long line of sailors, with shouldered mail bags, coming down the planks, carrying as many letters as you might suppose would be enough for a year's correspondence, and this repeated again and again during the week. Multitudes of them are letters from home, and at all the post-offices of the land people will go to the window and anxiously ask for them, hundreds of thousands of persons finding that window of foreign mail the open window toward Jerusalem. Messages that say: "When are you coming home to see us? Brother has gone into the army. Sister is dead. Father and Mother are getting very feeble. We are having a great struggle to get on here. Would you advise us to come to you, or will you come to us? All join in love, and hope to meet you, if not in this world, then in a better. Good by!"

THE EXILES.

Yes, yes; in all these cities, and amid the flowering western prairies, and on the slopes of the Pacific, and amid the Sierras, and on the banks of the Lagoon, and on the ranches of Texas there is an uncounted multitude who, this hour, stand and sit and kneel with their windows open towards Jerusalem. Some of them played on the heather of the Scottish hills. Some of them were driven out by Irish famine. Some of them in early life drilled in the German army. Some of them were accustomed at Lyons or Marseilles or Paris to see on the street Victor Hugo and Gambetta. Some chased the chamoise among the Alpine precipices. Some plucked the ripe clusters from Italian vineyard. Some lifted their faces under the midnight sun of Norway. It is no dishonor to our land that they remember the place of their nativity. Missome of their windows open to take in the free air of America and the sunlight of an atmosphere which no kingly despot has ever breathed, they forgot sometime to open the windows toward Jerusalem.

No wonder that the sons of the Swiss when far away from home, at hearing the national air of his own country sung, the malady of homesickness comes on him so powerfully as to cause his death. You have the example of the heroic Daniel of my text for keeping early memories fresh. Forget not the old folks at home. Write often, and if you have surplus means and they a deficit, make practical contribution, and rejoice that America is bound to all the world by ties of sanguinity as is no other nation. Who can doubt but it is appointed for the evangelization of all lands? What a stirring, melting, gospellizing theory that all the doors of other nations are open towards us, while our windows are open towards them!

AVENUE FOR SACRED INFLUENCE.

But Daniel in the text kept this port-hole of his domestic fortress unclosed because Jerusalem was the capital of sacred influences. There had smoked the sacrifice. There was the Holy of Holies. There was the Ark of the Covenant. There stood the temple. We are all tempted to keep our windows open on the opposite side, toward the world, that we may see and hear and appropriate its advantages. What does the world say? What does the world think? What does the world do? Worshippers of the world instead of worshippers of God. Windows open toward Babylon. Windows open toward Corinth. Windows open toward Athens. Windows open toward Sodom. Windows open toward the flats instead of windows open toward the hills. Sad mistake, for this world as a god is like something I saw the other day

IN THE MUSEUM OF STRASBURG,

Germany—the figure of a virgin in wood and iron. The victim in olden time was brought there, and this figure would open its arms to receive him, and once enfolded, the figure closed with a hundred knives and lances upon him, and then afterward let him drop one hundred and eighty feet sheer down. So the world first embraces its idolaters, then closes upon them with many tortures, and then lets them drop forever down. The highest honor the world could confer was to make a man Roman emperor; but out of sixty-three emperors, it allowed only six to die peacefully in their beds.

The dominion of this world over multitudes is illustrated by the names of coins of many countries. They have their pieces of money which they call sovereigns and half sovereigns, crowns and half crowns, Napoleons and half Napoleon, Fredericks and double Fredericks, and ducats, and Isabellinos, all of which names mean not so much usefulness as dominion. The most of our windows are open toward the exchange, toward the salon of fashion, toward the god of this world. In olden times the length of the English yard was fixed by the length of the arm of King Henry I, and we are apt to measure things by a variable standard and by the human arm that in the great crisis of life can give us no help. We need, like Daniel, to open our windows toward God and religion.

DANIEL'S ATTITUDE.

But, mark you, that good lion tamer is not standing at the window, but kneeling, while he looks out. Most photographs are taken those in standing or sitting posture. I now remember but one picture of a man kneeling, and that was David Livingstone, who in the cause of God and civilization sacrificed himself; and in the heart of Africa his servant, Majwara, found him in the tent by the light of a candle, stuck on the top of a box, his head in hands upon the pillow, and dead upon his knees. But here is a great lion-tamer, living under the dash of lights and his hair dishevelled of the breeze, praying The fact is, that a man can see further on his knees than standing on tiptoe. Jerusalem was about 550 statute miles from Babylon and the vast Arabian desert shifted its sand between them. Yet through that open window Daniel saw Jerusalem, saw all between it, saw beyond, saw time, saw eternity, saw earth and saw heaven. Would you like to see the way through your sins to pardon through your troubles to comfort, through temptation to rescue, through dire sickness to immortal health, through night to day through things terrestrial to things celestial, you will not see them till you take Daniel's posture. No cap of bone to the joints of the fingers, no cap of bone to the joints of the elbow, but cap of bone to the knees, made so because the God of the body was the God of the soul, an especial provision for those who want to pray, and physiological structure joins with spiritual necessity in bidding us pray, and pray, and pray.

In olden time the Earl of Westmoreland said he had no need to pray, because he had enough pious tenants on his estate to pray for him; but all the prayers of the church universal amount to nothing unless, like Daniel, we pray for ourselves. Oh, men and women, bounded on one side by Shadrach's red-hot furnace, and the other side by devouring lions, learn the secret of courage and deliverance by looking at that Babylonian window open toward the south-west! "Oh! you say, "that is the direction of the Arabian Desert!" Yes; but on the other side of the desert is God, is Christ, is Jerusalem, is Heaven.

HOW LACE IS MADE.

The Brussels lace is superior to all other lace, so beautiful, so multiform, so expensive—four hundred francs a pound. All the world seeks it. Do you know how it is made? The spinning is done in a dark room, the only light admitted through a small aperture, and that light falling directly on the pattern. And the finest specimens of Christian character I have ever seen or ever expect to see are those to be found in lives all of whose windows have been darkened by bereavement and misfortune save one, but under that one window of prayer the interlacing of divine workmanship went on until it was fit to deck a throne, a celestial embroidery, which angels admired and God approved.

NEW JERUSALEM.

But it is another Jerusalem toward which we now need to open our windows. The exiled evangelist of Ephesus saw it one day as the surf of the Icarian sea foamed and splashed over the boulders at his feet, and his vision reached forward to a wedding-day when the bride by dinner and maid was having garlands twisted for her hair and jewels strung for her neck just before the she puts her best gloved hand into the hand of her affianced: "I, John, saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Toward that bridal Jerusalem are our windows opened?

We would do well to think more of heaven. It is not a mere annex of earth. It is not a desolate outpost. As Jerusalem was the capital of Judah, and Babylon the capital of the Babylonian monarchy, and London is the capital of Great Britain, and Washington is the capital of our own republic, the new Jerusalem is the capital of the universe. The king lives there, and the royal family of the redeemed have their palaces there, and there is a Congress of many nations and the Parliament of all the worlds. Yes, as Daniel had kindred in Jerusalem of whom he often thought, though he had left home when a very young man, perhaps father and mother and brothers and sisters still living, and was homesick to see them, and they belonged to the high circles of royalty, Daniel himself having royal blood in his veins, so we have in the new Jerusalem a great many kindred, and we are sometimes homesick to see them, and they are all princes and princesses, in them the blood imperial, and we do well to keep our windows open toward their eternal residence.

ADMIT PURE BREEZES.

It is a joy for us to believe that while we are interested in them they are interested in us. Much thought of heaven makes one heavenly. The airs that blow through that open window are charged with life, and sweep up to us aromas from gardens that never wither, under skies that never cloud, in a spring-tide that never terminates. Compared with it all other heavens are dead failures.

Homer's heaven was an elysium which he describes as a plain at the end of the earth or beneath, with no snow or rainfall, and the sun never goes down, and Rhadamanthus, the justest of men, rules. Hesiod's heaven is what he calls the islands of the blest, in the midst of the ocean, three times a year blooming with most exquisite flowers, and the air is tinted with purple, while games and music and horse-races occupy the time. The Scandinavian's heaven was the hall of Walhalla, where the god Odin gave unending wine suppers to earthly heroes and heroines. The Mohammedan's heaven passes its disciples in over the bridge Al-Sirat, which is finer than a hair and sharper than a sword, and then they are let loose into a riot of everlasting sensuality.

IDEAS OF HEAVEN.

The American aborigines look to a heaven of illimitable hunting-ground, partridge deer and wild duck more than plentiful, and the bounds never off the scent, and the guns never missing fire. But the geographer has followed the earth round, and found no Homer's elysium. Voyagers have traversed the deep in all directions, and found no Hesiod's islands of the blest. The Mohammedan's celestial debauchery and the Indian's eternal hunting-ground for vast multitudes have no charm. But here rolls in

THE BIBLE HEAVENS.

No more sea—that is, no wide separation. No more night—that is, no insomnia. No more tears—that is, no heart-break. No more pain—that is, dismissal of lancet and bitter draught and miasma and banishment of neuralgias and catalepsies and consumptions. All colors in the wall except gloomy black; all the music in the major-key, because celebrative and jubilant. River crystalline, gate crystalline, and skies crystalline, because everything is clear and without doubt. White robes, and that means sinlessness. Vials full of odors, and that means pure regalement of the senses. Rainbow, and that means the storm is over. Marriage supper, and that means gladdest festivity. Twelve manner of fruits, and that means luscious and unending variety. Harp, trumpet, grand march, anthem, amen, and hallelujah in the same orchestra. Choral meeting solo, and overature meeting antiphon, and strophe joining dithyramb, as they roll into the ocean of doxologies. And you and I may have all that, and have it forever through Christ, if we will let Him with the blood of one wounded hand rub out our sin, and with the other wounded hand swing open the shining portals.

Day and night keep your window open toward that Jerusalem. Sing about it. Pray about it. Think about it. Talk about it. Dream about it. Do not be inconsolable about your friends who have gone into it. Do not worry if something in your heart indicates that you are not far off from its ecstasies. Do not think that when a Christian dies he stops, for he goes on.

An ingenious man has taken the heavenly furlongs as mentioned in Revelation, and has calculated that there will be in heaven one hundred rooms sixteen feet square for each ascending soul, though this world should lose a hundred millions yearly. But all will be ours, for they are family rooms; and as no room in your house is too good for your children, so all the rooms of all the palaces of the heavenly Jerusalem will be free to God's children, and even the throne room will not be denied, and you may run up the steps of the throne, and put your hand on the side of the throne, and sit down beside the King according to the promise, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne."

Obituary.

In the death of Mr. Donald McKellar, which took place at Ashburnham on Tuesday, this town loses one of its oldest and most respected citizens. The deceased gentlemen was a native (born in 1810) of Lochgilpead, Argylshire, Scotland, and came to Canada thirty-five years ago. For thirteen years he was a member of the firm of McKellar & Cameron, but on the destruction of the premises by fire, the business was not resumed. The late Mr. McKellar was a brother of the late Dr. McKellar, of Strathroy, and had one brother a Presbyterian minister in Scotland, and another a surgeon in the Royal Navy. The only other surviving members of his family are a brother, Angus, living in Puslinch township, near Galt, and a sister who resides in Glasgow. Mr. McKellar was never married, and had his home with Mrs. Donald McFarlane, during her life, and since her death with Mrs. John Erskine. He was an upright, honorable gentleman, and leaves behind many friends. His funeral will take place from the residence of Mr. John Erskine, Ashburnham, to-morrow afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

They Made a Mistake.

A bigamous boarder skipped out from Cohoes, N. Y., the other day with the faithless wife, 11 year old son, and household furniture of Nelson Hubert, with whom he had been boarding. The eloping pair arrived in Peterborough, and seeing the town was fair to look upon made up their minds to stay. A little obstacle to this, however, turned up in the shape of the injured husband, who, with blood in his eye and anger in his heart, applied to the Police Magistrate for a warrant to arrest them on a charge of stealing his furniture. The warrant was issued but the guilty pair had fled for Toronto, leaving behind them the wronged husband's property. While standing on the C. P. R. platform waiting for the train the faithless wife was overheard to say to her equally guilty companion, "I told you we'd better not have brought that furniture, we could not have got all we wanted at rock bottom prices at Belleghem's on Hunter Street." But it was too late, and the pair are still fleeing from justice, while the wronged husband has packed up his goods and left again for Uncle Sam's domains.

Prof. Dorenwend at Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough.

Baldness, gray hair, thin hair, dandruff, falling of the hair, &c., can all be remedied by the use of Dr. C. Dorenwend's Great German "Hair Magic," the most wonderful preparation for effectually restoring color and vitality of the hair, preventing falling, producing a heavy growth, making hair grow on bald spots, &c., ever discovered. It is unfailing in its results, as the many testimonials received daily by the sole owner and manufacturer for America, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, can testify. The Professor will be at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26, 27 and 28, and every one who wishes to try a bottle can procure it from him. The price is $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Call on him and procure a bottle.

PAYING INVESTMENTS.

The Dominion Government Purchases both the Sawers and Phelan Lots.

The Postoffice to be Erected on George Street.

Rumours being current on the street that the Government had finally purchased both the Sawers lot on Hunter street and Mr. Phelan's at the corner of George and Charlotte, a representative from THE EXAMINER office this morning called at the Registry Office and made a search, which resulted in the following discoveries:—

Mr. E. A. Peck, solicitor for the Dominion Government, yesterday registered a deed, transferring to the Dominion Government, from Mr. C. W. Sawers, a lot 66x100 feet, situate at the corner of Hunter and Water streets, for which the sum of $6,000 was paid.

He also registered another deed, conveying to the Government a part of Mr. Phelan's lot at the corner of George and Charlotte streets, 60x114 feet 7 inches, the consideration in this case being $3,600. To this deed was attached a clause setting forth that the said lot was purchased for the purpose of erecting thereupon a post-office for Peterborough.

Mr. Sawers purchased the property at the corner of Hunter and Water streets on the 31st July, 1882, at about $56 per foot. The price paid for it by the Government is almost $100 per foot, so that in three years the property has almost doubled its value.

Mr. Phelan's lot was purchased by him in February, 1882, and he paid for the half acre on the corner $3,250. A half acre is about 191 feet, 5 inches, by 114 feet, 2 inches. So that in three years from the time of his acquiring the property, after living rent free on it he clears $650 and still owns the larger portion of the property.

If there were only half a dozen more Post Offices to go up it would be a lucrative business to engage in the pursuit of buying up all the available sites in town.

Prof. Dorenwend is Coming.

It will be seen in another column that the great hair goods artist, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, will be in Peterborough at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 26th, 27th and 28th. He will have with with him a large stock of his excellent goods, such as Langtry, Parisian and Pompadour bangs, water waves, switches, ladies' wigs, gents' wigs and Toupees, &c. All who are in need of something neat, becoming and stylish in this line, should not fail to visit him and see his magnificent stock. It is a well-known fact that he is the leading hair goods manufacturer of Canada, and spares no labor and expense in being up to the times, and giving satisfaction to his customers and patrons. Remember he will be here for three days only at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26th, 27th and 28th.

Hall, Innes & Co., have just received direct from London, Black and Seal Brown Jersey MANTLE CLOTHS, much under Regular Prices.

Coming Events.

Rev. M. Baxter, editor of the London, England, Christian Herald, will lecture this evening and to-morrow evening in the Presbyterian Church on "Coming great Prophetic events." Mr. Baxter reads in scriptural prophecy, a series of momentous events to occur during the next few years, and the second coming of Christ about the year 1889. The lectures will doubtless be interesting and instructive.

(From a Correspondent.)

On Saturday, Oct. 17.—A football match was played in the Town Park, between an eleven from Cavan, and eleven men selected from the town (the best that could be procured in our town). The game began at 2:30 p.m., and soon it was evident that our boys had met their match. Many times the ball was passed over the goal in favour of the Cavan team, still no goal was scored by either clubs. Although Mr. Hamley, our favorite ¼ mile professional runner played, still a few of the Cavan boys struck out with as much speed and handled themselves equally as well as he. The referee declared the game an even one. A number of our leading townsmen were desirious of putting up $10 to $5 on the Cavan boys.

Huntingdon.

BELLEVILLE, Oct. 19.—In the assizes today Mary Adams and her son Charles, aged 12 years, were placed on trial, charged with the murder of Martin Archibald in the township of Huntingdon on August 30th last. Mrs. Adams is a widow, and resided with her son in Huntingdon. Archibald, who lived a short distance from them, visited Madoc on that day, and returning homeward in an intoxicated condition, sought admission to Mrs. Adams' house. He forced his way in, despite the resistance of her and the boy, and grappling with Mrs. Adams threw her on the floor, when the boy struck Archibald with an axe, disabling him. The woman afterwards, it is charged, struck deceased with an axe, and he died a few days afterwards from the effect of the wound. After the evidence had been heard the jury acquitted the prisoners without leaving the box.

Police Court.

Mr. Dumble Puts his Foot Down on Rowdyism.

John Poulette, on remand, was arraigned at the police court this morning on charges of disorderly conduct and making use of profane language on the public streets on Sunday evening. The charge was proven, and a fine of $5 and costs inflicted in the first case, and $2 and costs in the second.

Louis Clarke was then called. He was charged with having on Sunday evening assaulted P. C. Adams while that officer was in the execution of his duty, and elected to be tried summarily. Adams detailed the circumstances of the case as given in the EXAMINER on Monday evening, and stated that he had recognized the prisoner at the police Court on Monday, as one of those concerned in the assault upon him, and had arrested him. He knew him by his general appearance and his voice. Mr. O'Meara, who appeared for the prisoner endeavored to establish an alibi, but failed in doing so to the satisfaction of the magistrate. That official said there was no doubt that a violent assault had been committed, and the evidence against the prisoner, was so strong that he should commit. The offence was one of a very grave character, but as Mr. O'Meara informed him the prisoner was a married man, he would inflict a pecuniary fine instead of sending him to prison. He was determined to put a stop to all such lawlessness. A fine of $50 and costs was imposed, to be paid forthwith, or in default two months imprisonment.

William Halloran, another of Adams' assailants, on bail, was called, but failed to appear. It is thought that he has left the town, as he was the most active participant in the assault. After his name had been called several time it was decided to estreat his bail, $100 in cash, which had been deposited with the Court.

Both Poullette and Clarke were removed in custody, but it is believed their fines will be paid.

A warrant will probably be issued for the re-arrest of Halloran.

SALE OF FARM LAND

In the Township of Otonabee,

within six miles of the Town of Peterborough

Under and by virtue of a judgment of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, and in the Chancery Division thereof, made in the action of HARTLEY et al., vs. BEAVIS et al., and dated the Fourth day of September, A.D., 1885, there will be offered for sale, with the approval of the Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Peterborough, at his Chambers, in the said Town of Peterborough on

Saturday, 7th day of Nov'r, 1885

at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon, the following valuable farm property viz:—

The West Half of Lot Number 20, in the 10th Concession of the said Township of Otonabee.

containing one hundred acres more or less.

Upon the said property there are about 25 acres of hardwood land, the remainder thereof being cleared and under cultivation.

There are upon the said premises two barns and a log dwelling house, with woodshed attached, and a never-failing well. One of said barns is frame, 40 feet x 30 feet; the other a post barn, 50 feet x 27 feet; the said dwelling house is 30 feet x 20 feet. The soil is clay or clay loam, and well adapted for raising wheat and other grains and the property is situated in a first-class farming locality, within six miles of the Town of Peterborough.

The said premises will be sold subject to a lease thereof to Samuel Heatherly and John Heatherly, the Lessees therein mentioned, which has one year to run from 1st March, 1886 at a yearly rental of $130.00 per annum, and which said list contains a provision that the purchaser of said premises may determine the said lease upon giving to the Lessees one month's notice in writing, and paying to said Lessees the value of any crops then upon said premises, and whatever ploughing he may have done on said premises; and a reasonable sum to pay the expenses of removal from said premises. Said lands shall also be sold subject to the condition that the current year's rent, due upon the 25th Feb'y, 1886, shall be paid to the now owners of said lands.

TERMS:

Ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Vendor's solicitors at the time of the sale, and the balance of the purchase money within 30 days thereafter without interest.

Other terms and conditions will be the standing conditions of the Court.

For other terms and particulars, apply gratis to Messrs. Hatton & Wood, Barristers, Peterborough, or E. A. Peck, Esquire, Barrister, Peterborough.

Dated at Peterborough, this 29th Sept., 1885.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

The Little Lake and the Sawdust Nuisance.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR,—Your readers will be glad to learn that an association has been formed to take general and united action towards removing that disgrace to our town, the sawdust nuisance. Nature gave us a magnificent river and a beautiful lake to add to the charms of our fair town, and furnish a healthful breathing space for its citizens. For years past three or four millowners have been trying to fill both up with sawdust and slabs, until now, as revealed by the recent lowering of the water at the locks dam, it is found that the lake is filled to within a foot or two of the surface, and in some places above the surface, with a vast mass of decaying sawdust and mill refuse, the foul gases from which render any near approach to the water dangerous to health as well as disgusting to the senses. Every person who saw the lake during the low water was filled with dismay and alarm at the extent to which the lake was filled up, while the people living near by were almost driven from their homes by the poisonous gases. One gentleman has been obliged to leave town owing to severe illness due to this cause.

Hence it is that the step has been taken to remove this source of danger. It is from no spirit of personal hostility to the millowners who, it is hoped, will themselves see the necessity of the movement and do their part to assist it. If from selfishness or carelessness they continue to violate the law, they must be made to bear its penalties. The inflow of sawdust being stopped, an effort will be made to get the Government to dredge the lake. It is hoped that every public-spirited citizen will join the association and lend his influence to assist in this movement.

Yours truly,
DANGER SIGNAL.

Huntingdon.

BELLEVILLE, Oct. 19.—In the assizes today Mary Adams and her son Charles, aged 12 years, were placed on trial, charged with the murder of Martin Archibald in the township of Huntingdon on August 30th last. Mrs. Adams is a widow, and resided with her son in Huntingdon. Archibald, who lived a short distance from them, visited Madoc on that day, and returning homeward in an intoxicated condition, sought admission to Mrs. Adams' house. He forced his way in, despite the resistance of her and the boy, and grappling with Mrs. Adams threw her on the floor, when the boy struck Archibald with an axe, disabling him. The woman afterwards, it is charged, struck deceased with an axe, and he died a few days afterwards from the effect of the wound. After the evidence had been heard the jury acquitted the prisoners without leaving the box.

BERLIN, Oct. 16.—The severity with which boycotting is being carried on is shown by an incident which occurred at a recent funeral at Maeroom, county Cork. A boycotted relative of the deceased, together with his family, joined the funeral procession, whereupon the the priests and mourners withdraw. The obsequies were finally performed by three Catholic curates unattened.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it may it acts promptly, and thoroughly, subdues the pain and disease.

Board of health met pursuant to appointment at Council chamber, Centreville. Members present, chairman Mr. Riddell, Mr. John Mouncey, Joseph Fisher, A. Dawson.

A note was read from Mr. Wm. Emberson stating that from unavoidable causes he would not be able to be present and regretting the same.

The chairman, Mr. Riddell, explained why he had called the meeting, stating that smallpox is prevalent in many places and as vaccination is the best preventive, it would be well to call the attention of the people to the necessity of being vaccinated.

Moved by Mr. Mouncey, seconded by Mr. Fisher that the several clergymen and school teachers be asked to urge on the people the necessity of vaccination and that the trustees of public schools see that children attending school are duly vaccinated.

Moved by Mr. Fisher, seconded by Mr. Mouncey, that any person not able to pay the fees for vaccination, on application to any member of this board be given an order for the same gratis and that posters be placarded to this effect.

RIEL REFUSED RELIEF

Application for Leave to Appeal Refused.

The Privy Council Pitiless.

Substantial Justice has been Done.

Six Jurors Sufficient.

(Special Cablegram to the EXAMINER.)

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 22.—The Law Committee of the Imperial Privy Council to-day gave their decision in the appeal case of Louis Riel, affirming his conviction. They held that the Canadian Court in the first instance had jurisdiction of treason; that six men on the jury were sufficient; that shorthand notes were lawful reports of proceedings, and that substantial justice had been done to Riel. So plain was the case to their Lordships, that after the arguments by the prisoner's counsel, they did not think it necessary to call upon the Attorney-General on behalf of the Crown to show cause why leave to appeal should not be granted.

[Thus Louis Riel, on whose head rests his part of the fearful responsibility of two rebellions, with their attendant bloodshed and injury for public interests, stands, with the exception that there remains no hope for a new trial, in the same position as he did the day his death sentence was pronounced. The Reil case is now in the hands of Sir John Macdonald alone, and it remains with him to advise the Governor-General to fix a day for the execution of the death sentence, to commute the punishment, or deal with the matter as his political interests may suggest.

Something Worth Hearing.

Dr. Wild always says something worth hearing whenever he mounts the platform, but when he handles such a such a subject as "A Masonic Mystery," the public may expect a most interesting and absorbing oration. Bradburn's Opera House, on Wednesday, Oct. 28th.

Talent Appreciated.

Mr. D. D. Galletly has been engaged to sing at the eighth annual Hallowe'en concert of the Robert de Bruce Camp of the Sons of Scotland, in Toronto. The fact that this makes the third time Mr. Galletly has been engaged to sing at these concerts, and that he has the place of honour on the programme of the coming concert—the first and last numbers on both parts of it—involves a high compliment to his abilities as a public singer, especially of the songs of Auld Scotia.

A Painful Injury.

A brakeman named Bond, while coupling cars at the C.P.R. station this morning got the thumb of his right hand caught between the buffers and terribly crushed and torn. Dr. Kincaid was sent for and found the injures so severe that amputation of the thumb was necessary. The unfortunate man, who bore what must have been intolerable suffering with the calmness of a stoic, was much grieved at the loss of the member, as he is a good penman and will lose that ability.

Prof. Dorenwend at Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough.

Baldness, gray hair, thin hair, dandruff, falling of the hair, &c., can all be remedied by the use of Dr. C. Dorenwend's Great German "Hair Magic," the most wonderful preparation for effectually restoring color and vitality of the hair, preventing falling, producing a heavy growth, making hair grow on bald spots, &c., ever discovered. It is unfailing in its results, as the many testimonials received daily by the sole owner and manufacturer for America, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, can testify. The Professor will be at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26, 27 and 28, and every one who wishes to try a bottle can procure it from him. The price is $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Call on him and procure a bottle.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. Brumwell's new saw mill it being put in order so as to begin work at once. The machinery is from the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Company's works, Peterborough, and has all the latest improvements. In addition to the circular saw, Mr. Brumwell has added a lathe and two shingle machines.

The Ontario brought three scow loads of wood down the lake on Saturday last. There is at present a large quantity of wood at the wharf here, owned by one of the Peterborough dealers.

As the amount raised by subscription is not sufficient to defray all expenses in connection with the Scott Act campaign, it has been decided to hold an entertainment in the town hall, Bridgenorth, on Tuesday evening next, in aid of the Scott Act fund. We believe a good programme is being prepared, and no doubt the entertainment will be well worth attending.

PRACTICE CONDEMNS PRINCIPLE.

Referring to the fact that the Dominion Government has been importing supplies for the Intercolonial Railway, though they could be manufactured in Canada—a flagrant violation of the declared principles of the Conservative party—the Moncton (N.B.) Transcript is reminded of the fact that when Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways he purchased in the United States some 200 coal hoppers, giving out that he had secured them at a bargain. They were second-hand when bought, and proved to be useless for service on the I.C.R., owing to their tendency to jump the track. Nearly all of them have been condemned, and are fast being broken up. "The money spent in purchasing them was wasted," pertinently remarks our contemporary, "whereas it might have been spent in Moncton in building substantial, serviceable cars, and Moncton mechanics and business men might have got the benefit of that proper and judicious expenditure." Similar remarks will apply to the dredges purchased at the people's expense in Buffalo, which could have been made more cheaply in Canada, by manufactories in Canada, which were idle under the N.P., and which would have been glad of a Government contract to keep their workmen employed. These 1878-85 Tories have a most extraordinary fashion of carrying out their boasted policy of 'Canada for the Canadians.'"

THE POST OFFICE MATTER.

Some time in the remote past, the Dominion Government, coincident with, or consequent upon a general election, made an appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase of a site for a post-office in Peterborough. At once there sprang up, as if by magic, a multitude of eligible corner lots, owned by good Conservatives. Mr. Fuller, the government engineer was sent up to select a site, and no royal personage with millions at his disposal, was more obsequiously sought after. He came, he saw, and he returned, making his report to the Government; but that report was not acted on; the wire-pullers were at work, and even since that time they have been busy. By degrees the holders of sites with less influence were squeezed out of the race, and the contest dwindled down to two sites. One of these was selected by the Government, but the other party brought the pressure to bear with such good effect that this selection was rescinded, and the battle raged anew. The matter was set at rest this week, and the Gordian knot was cut by the purchase of a generous slice of both corner lots. The instrument conveying the one stipulated that it should be used for building a post-office on, and, for the present, it is settled that the post-office is to be on "Phelan's corner" as it is popularly known. The question naturally arises, what does the Government want with the other property? The answer is simple; it does not need it at all. It was simply purchased with the people's money as an easy way out of a dilemma. It would not do to offend influential political workers, and therefore the people must pay for mollifying political supporters of the Government. We have the authority of the local organ of the Government that the second lot will be used for the erection of Customs and Inland Revenue offices. This decision is simply illustrative of the Government's policy of extravagant expenditure for solely political purposes—which is rapidly bringing financial ruin—and its utter disregard of the public convenience. It was fondly hoped that the Government buildings in this town would be under one roof, since the public convenience would be greatly promoted thereby. But the government for its purposes, has chosen to ignore all considerations of economy or public convenience. It was originally intended to have both buildings under one roof, for the Minister of Public works in his report for 1884, says that no "site" had been selected. But political capital was to be gained and, as far as the government is concerned a job has been perpetrated. In regard to the site for the post office, nothing need be said. One party will contend that it is just the spot, while another holds an exactly opposite opinion. This would have been the case whatever site had been chosen. The local organ endorses the chosen Postoffice site on the lofty grounds that persons arriving in town by train, on any road, will be able to see the Postoffice building solemn solemn. By similar reasoning they cannot see the Customs buildings without going to look at them. Thus the organ virtually condemns the site. Now that the site is selected, innocent souls will conclude that the Orders of Building [illegible] once follow which are to be interchangeable. If it took the Government fifteen years to decide on a site, how long will it take them to decide on who will receive the contract? There is as much chance for making political capital in awarding the contract as in selecting the site, in fact, the Government has heretofore done rather the larger business in contract-broking.

The Big Things of America.

An English characteristic, strongly developed and even grotesquely caricatured in America, is the love of big things, which is, after all, a failing akin to virtue, and which will guide America into fair pastures after adversity and Mr. Matthew Arnold shall have chastened and purified Philistia. At present Americans are satisfied with things because they are large; and if not large they must have cost a great deal of money. * * * If a stranger were to ask an intelligent and well informed American what, in his opinion, was best worth seeing in the United States, he would probably say the pork packing establishments at Chicago. To this loathsome favor, like Yorick's [illegible] ty on her honeymoon tour, the statesman and tourist, are all drawn by some mysterious fascination to the shambles. They watch the unfortunate swine hurry up the broad way which leads to destruction; in absorbing horror, they see the throats of the victims cut and the descent of the victim, living or dead, it matters little which, into the boiling sea below, the scraping, disemboweling, and all the revolting details of the toilet of the dead. Few are permitted to escape the spectacle. Lord Coleridge, carried to the shambles by his friends of the Chicago bar, after having witnessed a few executions, begged to be allowed to retire, as otherwise he should be unable to eat sausage again. Whether Matthew Arnold saw and reflected on the mystery I know not, but we will hope that the apostle of culture refused to follow this worse than Asiantee custom. When I declined absolutely to witness the pig-killing my Chicago acquaintances were distinctly ruffled.—Sir Lepel Henry Griffin.

Three Meals a Day.

An English writer gives some much-needed advice as to the times and frequency of meals. In his opinion the present usual practice of three meals a day has good reason, as well as custom, in its favor. When work of any kind is being done, whether mental or bodily, the intervals between taking food should not be so long as to entail demands on the system when its store of material for the generation of force is exhausted. An ordinary full meal, in the case of a healthy man, is generally considered to have been completely digested and to have passed out of the stomach in four hours. A period of rest should then be granted to the stomach. Assuming that two hours are allowed for this, the interval between one meal and another would be six hours; and this accords with the experience of most men. During rest and sleep there is less waste going on, and especially during sleep there is greatly diminished activity of all the functions of the body. The interval, therefore, between the last meal of one day and the first of the next may be longer, as it generally is, than between the several day meals. Assuming that breakfast be taken about 8 or 9 o'clock, there should be a mid-day meal about 1 or 2. The character of this must depend on the nature of the day's occupation and the convenience of the individual. With women and children this is generally their hungry time, and the mid-day repast, whether called luncheon or dinner, is the chief meal. So it is with the middle and laboring classes, for the most part. But for merchants, professional men and others, whose occupations take them from home all the day, this is inconvenient, and moreover, it is not found conducive to health or comfort to take a full meal in the midst of the day's work. There can, however, be no doubt that much evil arises from attempting to go through the day without food, and then with exhausted powers sitting down to a hearty meal. Something of a light, easily digestible, but sustaining character should be taken toward 1 or 2 o'clock.

SIR ANTHONY'S HEIR.

Yesterday Basil Cowan was a young man with brilliant prospects; but today the telegram he holds in his hand informs him that his expectations are at an end—his uncle's wife, twelve years after their marriage, having presented Sir Anthony with a son and heir.

Sir Anthony and his wife have been abroad, and this is the first time that Basil has heard of the event which will make such a wonderful alteration in his prospects. He looks pale and anxious, as he broods over the news. He was at breakfast in his comfortable chambers when the telegram came; but the news has deprived him of all desire to continue the meal.

What would Laura Balfour, his affianced wife, say? She has been very sweet and amiable during their engagement, and it seems strange that a doubt of her truth and loyalty should arise at that moment. He opens a locket and looks at the pictured face within. It is a pretty face with laughing eyes, and a tangle of yellow hair over the babyish brow. The mouth is exquisite; but Basil looks at it with dissatisfaction for the first time in his life. Will she be strong enough to stand such a test? he asks himself as he takes his hat to go out. He means to know his fate without delay, for suspense is unbearable.

Laura and her widowed mother live in a little villa near Regent's Park. Mrs. Balfour is a very handsome woman, and it is said will shortly throw off her weeds and contract a second marriage, which, perhaps, accounts for her anxiety to see her pretty daughter comfortably settled in life. Basil slowly mounts the steps and rings the bell with a trembling hand. In another moment he will stand in the presence of his lady-love, with her sweet blue eyes and her pretty irresolute mouth.

Just then he hates the life that has robbed him of his inheritance, and may deprive him of all future happiness. It is a good opportunity to sound his sweetheart's affection; but he does not want to try her, lest she should be found wanting. He feels that where ignorance is bliss, it is, indeed, folly to be wise. Laura looks up eagerly when Basil is announced by the trim parlormaid. Her pink and white face is wreathed in smiles as she rises to meet him, holding out her two delicate little hands.

"I am so pleased to see you," she says with a swift, smiling, upward glance that changes to one of concern when she sees how pale and grave he looks.

"Why, what is the matter?" she says.

Basil does not beat about the bush. He tells her the truth at once, and as she listens a slight shade creeses over the pretty face. She cares for Basil as much as she could ever care for anyone—more, perhaps. But Laura feels that she cannot marry a poor man. The thought of love in a cottage has no charm for her. She knows he has enough to keep her in comfort; but she loves life and gaiety balls, picnics, races, the opera, and all the pleasures she would have to deny herself if she married Basil. No! it can never be. She loves him, and would have been happy as his wife, if only that stupid baby had never been born. It was very hard that it should have made its appearance after all these years, during which poor Basil had regarded himself as Sir Anthony's heir.

"I was in a very different position w en I asked you to be my wife," Basil says in conclusion, watching her keenly as he speaks. "And it is, therefore, right that you should have your freedom again. Of course, I would not ask you to fulfill your promise under the altered circumstances."

Poor fellow! how eagerly he waited for Laura to break the silence, for he hoped against hope. The girl sits with downcast eyes, while the color comes and goes in her mantling cheeks. She loves Basil, but she loves ease and luxury more.

"If he had only s n mamma first," she thinks, trying to transfer the responsibility to Mrs. Balfour's motherly shoulders.

"It is better—is it not?" he says, finding she does not speak, and then using a lover's privilege for the last time—he feels it is the last time—he takes her pretty flower-like face between his strong, brown hands and looks down at her with longing eyes. His idol has feet of clay. The deep, tender love of his manhood has been lavished on a worthless object. And yet if he might only have gone on being deceived! The girl is sorry to lose her handsome, distinguished-looking lover, and cries a little in a pretty, becoming way. She would not spoil her eyes or redden her nose for the world. That would be foolish, indeed, since her face is her fortune. That evening Basil got a properly-worded letter from Mrs. Balfour, which he reads and then tears up into a hundred pieces. He knew how it would be long before the delicately-scented missive came. It was a disagreeable letter to write; but Mrs. Balfour has performed the delicate task well, and sugared the bitter pill to the very best of her ability, for she likes Basil, and is sorry for him. He pets that Mrs. Balfour at times, and almost hates her now, for it is through her teaching that Laura is so worldly wise.

He is sitting in his chamber when some one noisily knocks at the door, beating a regular tattoo on the panels.

"Come in," he cries rather impatiently, without turning his head. He knows who his visitor is, and would gladly avoid his company if e could. Tom Eden is the last person he wishes to see in his present mood. They were schoolfellows, and Tom is one of his best friends; but when we are in trouble even our best friends seem in the way.

"How goes it, old fellow?" asked Tom, putting his hand on Basil's shoulder and looking at him with questioning eyes. His manner is in slight contrast to the noisy fashion of his entrance. But he sees something in Basil's attitude that tells him that all is not well with his friend, and his sympathies are aroused in a moment.

"Do I look so disconsolate then?" says Basil, pulling himself together, and laughing a little as he glances at Tom's short, stout figure and sunburnt

"You look better now," returns his friend, reassured by Basil's laughter. "I thought you might have had bad news. Sir Anthony's——"

"Rejoicing at the birth of a son and heir," says Basil quietly. "I am honestly glad of it, Tom, or, at least, I shall be presently; but the disappointment is new, you know, and I have just had another to add to it. Miss Balfour has——"

"Not thrown you over?" cries Tom, interrupting him, with a flush that shows through the bronze of his skin.

Basil nods his head, and for a moment there is silence between them. When Tom does speak it is not to resume the subject. Abusing the woman who has treated his friend so shabbily will not mend matters.

"I came to ask you if you can spare time to run down to N——," he says, going to the cupboard to help himself to a brandy and soda. "Bessie is home from school, and has sent me a letter ordering me to present myself at headquarters on pain of her displeasure. You'll come, won't you, old fellow?—the change will do you all the good in the world."

Basil hesitates for a moment, and then accepts the invitation, for it will take him out of London, and he will then avoid meeting Laura. For the present, at least, he does not feel equal to the ordeal of seeing her again, now that all is at an end between them. He remembers Bessie as an over-grown girl, and decides in his own mind that her presence will not add to the comfort of his visit. Still, she may not be quite so much of a nuisance as he anticipates, and after all, it would be better to put up with a few Tomboy tricks than remain in London. So he goes with Tom to the cathedral town where his widowed mother lives with her two younger boys, and the daughter before mentioned, who has just returned from Germany. Tom's home is a very pretty little place, with a smooth lawn, on which a young lady is strolling at the moment of their arrival, with her eyes fixed on a book. The roses that bloom on her cheek and lips are lovely, and her brown hair is changed to gold as the sunlight rests upon it. Altogether she makes a ravishing picture of youthful beauty, and so thinks Basil as he gazes on her. Nevertheless, there is a look of annoyance on his face as he says:

"Tom, I wish you had told me that your mother had a visitor. If I had known of it, I would not on any account have accepted your invitation."

"A visitor!" exclaims Tom, and bursts into a hearty laugh that reaches the ears of the girl on the lawn. "Why, that's Bessie!"

Before Basil can express his surprise at the transformation of the awkward school-girl into a graceful woman, Bessie is at her brother's side.

"Why, Tom, dear Tom, how good of you to come so soon," says a fresh, young voice. "We did not expect you for a week."

"I wanted to give you a surprise," returned Tom. "And see, I have brought Mr. Cowan with me. You remember him—don't you!"

Bessie does remember him, and colors a little as they shake hands, thinking of the many tricks played on her brother's long suffering friend in the days gone by.

"What a little wretch I was," she says penitently. "I am sure you must have been afraid of me."

Basil makes some light rejoinder, but tells himself that he was not half so much afraid of her then as he is now. Laura has not improved his opinion of women. He has made up his mind that Bessie is a flirt, and her anxiety to treat her brother's friend with civility strengthens the idea.

"I hope Tom will let her know that I am not an eligible party," he thinks bitterly, as he enters the house.

Mrs. Eden warmly welcomes her son's friend. She is a sweet, contented-looking woman, fond of all her children, and very proud of her beautiful daughter. Bessie is a good musician, a fair artist, reads French, German, and Italian, and her mother is naturally anxious to show off her accomplishments. The girl herself refuses to "show off," and Basil soon finds that if he wants her society he will have to seek it. She never throws herself in his way. He finds that she has other admirers, and the discovery does not please him.

"She is too good for the idiots that dangle about her," he tells Tom indignantly.

"I shall think presently that you want her yourself," observes Tom by way of a joke.

But the jesting words have more truth in them than he imagines, for Basil is beginning to realise that Bessie is worth a thousand shallow-hearted Laura's.

"I came to the country for peace," he thinks. "The best thing I can do is to go back to London."

But when he speaks of leaving he sees Bessie's face change color, and a wild hope springs to life in his heart.

"Will you come with me?" he asks, and his voice shakes, for he loves Bessie as he never loved Laura.

Bessie's answer was evidently satisfactory, and Basil has reason to be grateful that he is not Sir Anthony's heir, for Sir Anthony's heir would have married Miss Balfour and regretted it before the honeymoon was over. He married for spite, Laura told herself, when she heard the news, which is scarcely as agreeable to her as it ought to be, seeing that she is engaged to an elderly baronet.

But when a few days later she stands face to face with the married pair, and sees the look of proud proprietorship in Basil's eyes, she feels with a sore pang of envy that the old love is dead, and that its ashes can never be rekindled. Tom looks at his brother-in-law anxiously, and presently draws him aside to whisper:

"Are you quite cured?"

"Quite, Tom," returns Basil. "The luckiest day of my life was when I received that telegram informing me of the birth of Sir Anthony's heir."

He does not dream that his wife knows anything about his former attachment for Miss Balfour; but her [illegible] were alone together undeceived him.

"Basil," she says in a low tone of voice, "your old love is sweetly pretty."

"Not half so pretty as my wife," replies Basil as he draws her nearer. [illegible] "but it was scarcely kind of Tom to tell you."

"It wasn't Tom," returned Bessie. "It was Miss Balfour herself. She said——"

How He Outlived His Family.

A Boston merchant who lived and died on Sumner street was a curious instance of one who was an invalid from childhood, who never imagined himself ill when he was not, nor exaggerated his actual illness, nor feared unduly sickness, or pain, or death itself. But it was the business of his life to take care of his health, and he devoted himself to this work with a wonderful assiduity. He rode just so far each day, when the weather was fair, and at such an hour. He had a great variety of clothing, which he regulated with precision by the thermometer, sometimes changing his dress many times in a day, and selected for his overclothes when he rode out the very garments which the mercury indicated. He had a weathercock put upon his stable, within fair view from his bedroom and sitting-room, and that, and his thermometer, and all possible and impossible signs of the weather he was watching constantly, and found in these occupations a very agreeable way of employing all his day and all his days. How far his long life is to be attributed to this excessive care it is impossible to tell; but he outlived every brother and sister, every brother's wife and every sister's husband, and his own wife, who died in 1837 at the age of 81.—Every Other Saturday.

A Crook's Resort.

This government is being bled to death by Canada, and the administration does not seem to be able to grasp the situation. Our American bank cashiers are flocking to Canada with the millions they have accumulated by a lifetime of industry in stealing, and all efforts to bring them back seem to be useless, as the Canadian judges refuse to let the cashiers be interfered with. There is a sentiment in Canada that the man who steals money in America and takes it to Canada is a thoroughbred, and society takes the defaulter in, and the courts stand between him and harm. As long as the defaulter has money he is safe in Canada. The only way for our people to get even is to advertise this country as a resort for Canadian defaulters. Let it once be known that defaulters from the other side will be welcomed here, met with covered carriages at the line between the two countries, escorted to palatial hotels and given receptions, attended by our best people, and it will be possible to get some of the money back. This country is much larger than Canada, and has more banks, consequently the balance of trade will always be in favor of Canada, but by properly attending to business here we can get some of the defaulters to settle in this country, when we can beat them out of the money they steal at our leisure, as Canada does by our defaulters. All that we want is to have the Canadian defaulters feel that America is a home where they are safe, and the only way to convince them is to advertise. The Secretary of State should at once cause advertisements to be inserted in the Canadian papers calling attention of bank cashiers to the ease with which they can reach our borders with their plunder, where customs inspectors will be instructed to ask no questions. Circulars should at once be sent to every bank cashier in the Dominion, giving the price of board, and the names of some of our best criminal lawyers, with the percentage they will charge to assist a cashier to evade our judges and realize on their steal. Attention should be called to the fact that society equal to that which opens its arms to Eno in Canada will be ready to receive Canadian defaulters on their arrival, and that everything will be done that can be done to make it pleasant for them. This matter is a serious on and the administration could no thing that would brin o the country than t ries for the comfo Peck's Sun.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

In order to make room for Xmas stock, now coming in, Sailsbury Bros. are offering bargains—20 to 30 per cent discount.

The Concert this Evening.

The following is the programme to be given at the concert in aid of the Peterborough Protestant Home in Bradburn's Opera House this evening :—

St. Luke's Church.

Remember the special service in connection with the laying of the foundation stone of St. Luke's school room to-night at 7:30. An eloquent sermon may be expected from the Rev. Dr. Roy. Seats free. All are invited.

Malicious Injury.

Railway detective Spence yesterday afternoon brought in a lad named Thomas Fullerton, who lives on the 2nd Concession of Smith, who was charged before P. M. Dumble with malicious injury, by breaking windows on railway cars of the Missing Link. He was fined $2, and $5 damages.

The Post Office Site.

The fact that surveyors were at work measuring on the Phelan lot this morning, is thought by some to be another indication that the post-office is to stand there, and the faction are now offering to bet two to one that it will. The syndicate, on the other hand, maintain that the clause in the deed stating that the property was purchased for a post-office site, means nothing, and a prominent member this morning remarked to an EXAMINER reporter that he would like to see some of those gentlemen who are so anxious to bet on what they consider a certainty, as he is ready to accommodate them. The safest betting would be to wager that the post-office won't be built on either—till after the general election. If Rev. Mr. Baxter's calculations are correct it would be as well to defer laying the foundation stone till A. D. 1896 and see how people feel about it then.

Prof. Dorenwend is Coming.

It will be seen in another column that the great hair goods artist, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, will be in Peterborough at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 26th, 27th and 28th. He will have with with him a large stock of his excellent goods, such as Langtry, Parisian and Pompadour bangs, water waves, switches, ladies' wigs, gents' wigs and Toupees, &c. All who are in need of something neat, becoming and stylish in this line, should not fail to visit him and see his magnificent stock. It is a well-known fact that he is the leading hair goods manufacturer of Canada, and spares no labor and expense in being up to the times, and giving satisfaction to his customers and patrons. Remember he will be here for three days only at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26th, 27th and 28th.

Mr. Baxter's Lecture.

Rev. Mr. Baxter, Editor of the London, England Christian Herald, lectured to a fairly large audience last evening in St. Paul's Church. The Rev. gentleman is a close and critical searcher for biblical truth, and his lecture or discourse is termed "Coming Prophetic events." These events, which he contends will take place during the next eleven years, consist in a French conquest of Germany, resulting in the formation of a French Roman confederation of ten Kingdoms: France, Spain, Italy, Austria, Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and the United Slavonic States; the arising of a new Napoleon about the year 1889. The second coming of Christ, the three years of Great Tribulation and massacre of christians, and Christ's descent on Mount Olivet at Jerusalem, the destructions of antichrist and the conversion of Jews and Gentiles and the commencement of the millenium. Mr. Baxter gives a series of calculations upon which his theory is based, corresponding with bible prophecy. He will delivar another discourse in the same church this evening.

Great discount sale at Sailsbury's, to make room for Xmas stock.

Hosiery.

Fair, VanEvery & Co., are selling rapidly a "wholesale closure" of fine wool hose at about half price. Go early for first choice.

Closed Down.

The saw mill on the Dickson estate shut down for the season on Tuesday last, having run some weeks longer than it did last season.

Secure Your Seats

In good time for Dr. Wild's interesting lecture on a "Masonic Mystery." Bradburn's Opera House will be crowded on October 28th, and those who do not promptly secure seats will be unwise.

He Will Run Them Both.

The Albion Hotel in Ashburnhom, from which Mr. Young is retiring, has been leased by Mr. William Kennealy, of the Kennealy House. It is not Mr. Kennealy's intention, however, to give up his hotel in town, but the Ashburnham hotel will be run in his interest by a competent person.

Police Court.

Thomas McHugh, who was arrested for drunk and disorderly conduct last night by P. C. Charles McGinty, was brought before the P. M. this morning. The prisoner being either unable or unwilling to pay a fine, was sent to goal for ten days.

"That Proposed Convention."

Mr. Beatty is out in another letter, in which he seeks to justify his action in reference to the misrepresentations made to the Education Department, and, in which he makes admissions that do not tend to strengthen his contentions. His admitting that "teachers absenting themselves to attend that convention, brought themselves within the scope of that motion," shows how little he knows of the school law. If the Teachers' Association were properly constituted—according to law—no resolution of the school board, no matter how contorted, or misrepresented, could over-ride the Departmental regulations, which provide that every Inspectoral Division shall have a Teachers Institute to attend which, teachers are allowed two days twice a year. In regard to his reference to subtracting two days from the school term for convention purposes, the EXAMINER does not care whether two or four days are taken, but it holds that the taking of one or many days from the school term seriously interferes in large centres with school work, as has also been shown by Dr. Tassie regretting to the Board, that the absenting of teachers interfered with not only school routine, but the minds of the pupils were taken from their studies, and thus their spirit of ardour was checked, and their own progress and advancement retarded. Mr. Beatty claims that he had no desire to misrepresent the Board to the Minister of Education. Why, then, did he do so? Was he impelled by some force that made him an involuntary agent in taking such a course? He should know that informal "information obtained from responsible parties" is not a proper warrant for taking official action, and should bear in mind that no single individual represents the the Board. If Mr. Beatty had applied to the mover or seconder of the motion in question he would not have placed himself in the unpleasant position of a subordinate misrepresenting the action and imputing unworthy motives to an educational corporation. It should be recollected that Peterborough is an Inspectoral District in itself; and, when the Board is requested to provide, by the individual who alone has the authority to do so, accommodation for the meetings of an Institute, we are sure the Board will promptly recognize any such demand. In reference to the holiday question, if teachers were wise they would not show such an irrepressible anxiety to secure every possible holiday. The Board is not exceedingly hard-hearted, and it might see its way clear to granting a prolonged leave of absence to teachers whose thirst for holidays cannot be slaked by the very liberal provisions laid down by statute.

What they are Saying.

The end of the world is coming before A. D. 1900.—Rev. M. Baxter.

Tommy Beavis should put a number on his old phaeton.—The licensed carters.

I'll bring some of you fellows up at the police court.—Tommy.

The Syndicate won't take bets of two to one on the post office site now.—The Faction.

Yes, we will, come and try us.—The Syndicate.

Substantial justice has been done to Riel.—The British Privy Council.

Now, Sir John, no more squirming, do your duty.—The Canadian public.

We Would Like to Know.

Who was the mean thief that stole the turtle out of the Court House Park fountain.

When work will be commenced on the new post-office.

How many of Rev. Mr. Baxter's hearers were converted to his views last night.

And if any of them would refuse a good paying investment calculated to mature about A. D. 1896.

What Sir John will do now that Riel is thrown back on his hands.

And if there is any good reason why he shouldn't carry out the sentence.

What We May Expect.

A musical treat at the Protestant Home concert this evening.

And a big house.

Rowdys to let policemen alone in future.

Rev. Mr. Baxter's converts to continue buying, selling, marrying and giving in marriage.

The laying of the corner stone of St. Luke's school room this afternoon.

And an interesting discourse by Rev. Dr. Roy in St. Luke's Church this evening.

Fresh south to west winds, mostly fair weather, with light showers in a few places.

Well and Truly Laid.

The Foundation Stone of St. Luke's School House Laid with Appropriate Ceremonies.

The foundation stone of the new Sunday School House of St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, was laid yesterday afternoon. At three o'clock in the afternoon divine service, which was largely attended by members of the congregation, was held in the church, when the prayers and lessons incident to the occasion were read; the prayers by Rev. T. B. Angell, curate of St. John's, the first lesson by Rev. H. Softly, of Otonabee, and the second by Rev. J. Gibson, incumbent of Norwood. The Rector of St. Luke's, Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, then gave a brief, suitable address, reviewing the growth of the parish since its inception in 1876, in which the present movement was one more stride, and showing how much reason there was for thankfulness to God for all the blessings he had granted it. He exhorted the congregation to continued effort in the fulfilment of God's work.

At the conclusion of Mr. Bradshaw's address the congregation, headed by the clergy, repaired to the site of the school house, where the corner stone was laid by Mr. John Burnham. A metal case, containing the was deposited in a cavity beneath it:—

"The congregation of St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, was first formed in July, 1876. This was effected mainly through the active exertions and liberality of the late Rev. Mark Burnham, A. B., of Ashburnham, the founder of the parish and the donor of the site where the church now stands.

The first services in connection with the congregation were held on the 9th of July, 1876, in a small school room erected where the present structure now stands. The Right Rev. A. N. Bethune, D. D., Bishop of Toronto, officiated in the morning, and the Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, the first incumbent of the parish, at the evening service.

On the 13th of July, 1876, the vestry was duly organized, when Messrs. John Burnham and H. T. Strickland were elected church wardens.

On the 10th of May, 1877, the foundation stone of St. Luke's church was laid with appropriate ceremonies.

The church was opened on the 23rd of September, 1877, when the rite of confirmation was administered by the Bishop of Toronto.

On the 17th of May, 1878, the church was duly consecrated, Canon Stewart being the preacher, and the act of consecration being effected by His Lordship, the Bishop of Toronto.

On the 26th of October, 1884, the Rev. W. C. Bradshaw was inducted as Rector of Ashburnham, by the Right Rev. Arthur Sweatman, D. D., Bishop of Toronto.

He still retains the position.

The other officials of the church are Messrs. John Burnham, M. P., and H. T. Strickland, Church Wardens; Richard Meade and H. T. Strickland, Lay delegates to Synod, and Mr. E. A Peck Lay Superintendent of the Sunday School.

The corner stone of St. Luke's school room, Ashburnham, was duly laid by John Burnham, Esq., M. P., this twenty-second day of October, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, being the forty-ninth year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Marquis of Lansdowne being Governor-General of Canada; the Hon. John Beverly Robinson, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, and the Right Reverend Arthur Sweatman, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Toronto.

BUILDING COMMITTEE.—Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, Messrs. John Burnham, H. T. Strickland, Richard Meade, R. B. Rogers, and Absolm Ingram.

ARCHITECT.—W. Blackwell, Esq., Peterborough.

CONTRACTORS.—Jos. Phillips, Ashburnham, and Henry Carveth, Peterborough.

After the stone was laid further prayers were read and the ceremony brought to a close by the doxology and benediction.

THE BUILDING.

The new school house will be a structure or white brick, similar in architectural style to the church. At the northern end will be a platform 20x9 feet. From this the floor rises on a gentle inclined plane for about two-thirds of the length of the building, the back being twenty-one inches higher than at the platform. This part of the school room will have seating for three classes, and at the south end will be class rooms. The plans are by W. Blackwell, Esq., and the contractors are Jos. Phillips, of Ashburnham and Henry Carveth.

SERMON BY REV. DR. ROY.

Service was held at St. Luke's Church at 7.30 in the evening when the rector and Revs. T. B. Angell, Softly and Gibson officiated, and a sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Roy, of Belleville. The reverend gentleman took as his text the 23rd verse of the 4th chapter of St. John, "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him." From this text he preached an excellent sermon, pointing out that our Saviour's words seemed to imply that a better time was coming, and that the thought and instincts of the human heart all led us to look forward to that better day. One of the influences in bringing about this better day was the imparting of religious truth to the young, and they were acting in the line of duty towards God. He trusted that under God's blessing it would become a source of heavenly love, knowledge and truth, and an influence for the sanctification, not only of their own hearts, but those of generations yet to come.

The services was largely attended, and a deep interest manifested in Dr. Roy's discourse.

A Charming Charity Concert.

Last evening one of the most pleasant and successful local concerts ever held in Peterborough was given in Bradburn's Opera House, under the auspices of the ladies connected with the management of the Peterborough Protestant Home. There was a pretty full house, the dress circle being particularly well filled, and the cultured audience could well appreciate the excellent programme, which opened with overture by the Fire Brigade Orchestra, with "My Queen" waltzes, which they performed with fine precision and excellent taste, features which also marked the rendering of their second number, the "Sportsman" quadrilles. This was their first appearance in public, and judging by the appreciation they met last night, it will, by no means be their last. Stephen Glover's lively chorus, "Let the Hills and Valleys Resound," received full justice at the hands of the choir of St. Paul's Church, to the accompaniment of Professor Parker, to whose tuition is, no doubt, largely due the spirited and finished rendition of this number. Mr. Craven added new laurels to his crown in his exceedingly happy rendering of Pinsuti's "Queen of the Earth," but in his second number an unfortunate attack of of hoarseness interfered seriously with his otherwise creditable execution of "Stars of the Summer Night." "Down Among the Lilies" was the title of a charming trio charmingly presented by Mrs. Chambers and Misses Clara Cluxton and Haultian, Mr. Heathfield accompanying. Professor Parker delighted the audience with an exceedingly finished and artistic rendering of Scotch airs as a piano solo and gave proof that he is as much at home with the piano as he is before his acknowledged specialty, the organ, and his master hand, throughout the evening, contributed largely to th success of the numbers he accompanied with so much judgment and taste. Miss Clara Cluxton brilliantly sustained her reputation as one of our leading local vocalists, her rich, mellow contralto voice developing with great sweetness the beauties of "The Birds that Come in Spring." In the second part she was equally fortunate in her presentation of that beautiful song, "When the Children are Asleep." She was recalled both times, but simply acknowledged the compliment. There is, however, one great fault with Miss Cluxton's singing—the public has too infrequent opportunities of listening to it. The second part opened brilliantly with the presentation, by the Charlotte-street Methodist Church choir, of the sparkling chorus, "Away, the Morn is Freshly Breaking," which was so well done that the audience would not rest without a repetition of the chorus. What was generally conceded to be the gem of the evening was a piano solo by Miss Edmison, Weber's "L'Invitation a la Valse." Her rendering of this classical selection was exceedingly brilliant in tempo, technique and delicacy of shading. She was rapturously recalled, and responded with Heuselt's, "Si oiseau j'etais, etc.," which showed that this clever young pianiste, who has few equals among amateurs, was equally at home in secular and classical music. "La Primavera" an Italian selection, was exquisitely given by Mrs. Chambers, and in such a taking manner as to elicit a warm encore. She reponded with "Kathleen Mevourneen" So well does Mrs. Chambers acquit herself, that it seems she improves on every appearance. A beautiful quartette "Joyous Spring" sung by Misses Cluxton, Denniston and Wells, and Messrs. Craven, Budden and Haultain, followed by "God Save the Queen," brought a delightfully pleasant evening to a close.

Prof. Dorenwend at Grand Central Hotel Peterborough.

Baldness, gray hair, thin hair, dandruff, falling of the hair, &c., can all be remedied by the use of Dr. C. Dorenwend's Great German "Hair Magic," the most wonderful preparation for effectually restoring color and vitality of the hair, preventing falling, producing a heavy growth, making hair grow on bald spots, &c., ever discovered. It is unfailing in its results, as the many testimonials received daily by the sole owner and manufacturer for America, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, can testify. The Professor will be at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26, 27 and 28, and every one who wishes to try a bottle can procure it from him. The price is $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Call on him and procure a bottle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

Our Suburban Post Office Site.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I see by Wednesday evening's EXAMINER that the site for the new post office has at last been settled on the Phelan lot, and that probably work would be commenced at once. I hope that now the directors of the Street Railway Company will push forward their work with the greatest rapidity, as it will be a very necessary convenience for merchants and others in No. 3 and 4 wards in getting to and from the new post office with their mail matter.

Yours &c.,
A MERCHANT.

Peterborough, Oct. 23, 1885.

Ruffianism in Lakefield.

DEAR SIR,—Lakefield must be the Paradise of rowdies. I should think that all the good rowdies pray that, when they die, they may go to Lakefield, just as good Americans are said to pray that they may be sent to to Paris when they die.

North of the bridge, the rowdy may have a 'good time,' free from restraint, so far as magisterial interference is concerned, if the actual state of things may be taken as a fair criterion.

On Sunday evening last, the Lakefield roughs had a particularly good time of it. The weather was propitious, and the moon, clear, (unlike others of their class, these favored individuals do not fear the light, why should they?) and so they assembled in front of the P. C. A., Hall, as being the most suitable place for their operations; and there, having stretched a rope across the sidewalk, they succeeded in tripping up a delicate lady, on her way to church; she fell heavily and hurt herself; but there was no fear of the constable before their eyes, so what need they care?

"Vive la brutalite."

Hitherto, these aimable youths have confined their innocent pleasantry to standing in a line, or sitting on the fence, as the case might be, on Sunday evenings, and making rude remarks, seasoned with vile oaths, about every unprotected female that passed them, provided that she were sufficiently well dressed to be considered fair game. But now they are progressing, and who shall say when, or where they will stop?

It appears to me, that the only chance of putting an end to the nuisance, is for respectable citizens, who desire to take their families to church quietly and peaceably; or who wish the female members of their families to be able to walk one street, at least on the Sabbath, without being molested, to unite in offering a reward for the apprehension of these ruffians, and in insisting on letting the law take its course. The subscriber would gladly contribute liberally toward a fund to be used for this purpose, and no doubt others who have wives and daughters, would do the same. I would call public attention to the fact, that this is not, by any means, the first time during the last few years, that similar complaints have appeared in the local newspapers.

Yours, etc.,
PHILOLEGIS.

COUNCIL MEETING.

The regular meeting of the village council was held in the council chamber on Monday, the 12th inst.

Present—The Reeve in the chair, Councillors McWilliams and Moore.

Minutes of last regular meeting read and confirmed.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Moore, that the clerk is hereby instructed to advertise for tenders to deliver 500 yards of gravel for village use. It to be delivered within the corporation at such places as directed by the council, during next six months, gravel to be such as will be approved of by the council; lowest or any tender not necessarily to be accepted. Carried.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Moore, that the Reeve and clerk be authorized to make such arrangements with Mr. John Riddell in regard to renting part of the building on Mill Reserve No. 1, as they may consider proper. Carried.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Moore, that the sum of $25 be granted to dig a drain from Clements street east, along Smith street, and to put in a cedar pipe six by six inches and fill in the drain again, depth and length of drain to be agreed upon by the mover and seconder of this resolution. Carried.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Moore, that the following accounts be paid and the Reeve's order do issue for the same, viz:—Peter Baptie, lumber, $68.36; Isaac Watson, wages, $22.27½; Wm. Smith, wages, $11.87½; John Rogers, horse hire, $5.50; total, $95.91. Carried.

Moved by Councillor Moore seconded by Councillor McWilliams, that this Council do now adjourn, to meet again at the call of the Reeve. Carried.

SAD ACCIDENT.

On Monday evening a young man called William Armstrong, who resides near White Lake, township of Dummer, was engaged in threshing at Mr. R. Spencers, Burleigh, they were through, but were cleaning up the floor and running the stuff through the mill, he attempted to hasten it by feeding it with his left hand, which got caught in the cylinder, and in an instant the hand and arm up to the elbow were in shreds. He was placed on a waggon and brought to Lakefield, and medical aid summoned, when it was found that the arm would have to be amputated above the elbow, which operation was performed on Tuesday morning, and the sufferer, under Dr. Fraser's care, is now doing as well as could be expected.

MORE ROWDYISM.

The following item was handed to your correspondent by a prominent gentleman; it is not the only act of which they have been guilty during the last few evenings, and as they are well known, may find themselves before the Police Magistrate in Peterborough, and where they will find other employment than destroying fences, stealing cabbage, &c., and such tricks as the enclosed note mentions:

The Lakefield rowdies had a fine time of it on Sunday evening last. They succeeded in tripping up a lady, (Mrs. Tate), on her way to church, by means of a rope stretched across the sidewalk, (in front of the P.C.A., Hall), for that purpose. And later on, food for their mirth and mockery, was furnished by another lady who, on her way home from church, got into difficulties with her horse. Lakefield wants an energetic constable, with a perfectly fearless magistrate to back him up.

The Poets and Poetry of Canada.

[No. 15.]

Evan McColl.

"Verse sweetens toil, however rude the sounds
All at her work the village maiden sings.
Nor while she turns the giddy wheel around Revolves the sad vicissitude of things."
—Gifford.

Our readers can readily recall the objects which, as before stated, we had in view, in preparing a series of articles on the Canadian poets.

We are desirous first, of building up and fostering to the utmost of our power, a healthy, national literature. To effect this, our articles will, we hope, render some slight aid in making known, within, at least, a limited circle, the extent of the poetical efforts made by several of our countrymen.

Dr. Johnson says, "the chief glory of a nation lies in its authors," and surely it is not creditable to us, that so many of our writers are neglected, and so little is known of their works, even by those who boast a liberal education.

In these brief sketches, we try to awaken interest in our literature, by giving biographical notices of the authors and then calling attention to specimens from their chief productions. Our hope is to get the reading Canadian public to study for themselves the writings to which we call attention, and to pay particular heed to the work of our "pioneers in poetry." Our quotations must perforce be brief, and the fullest extracts may sometimes fail to give a good general idea of the author's powers. But we do our best in the limited space we can allot to this subject, and trust that the potion meted out, may, like the fabled fount of knowledge, cause an insatiable thirst for more. We have abundant proof already that our work is appreciated, and so we shall give ourselves more diligently to our allotted task in future.

In this number we quote from the writings of Evan McColl, the "Mountain Minstrel."

As in duty bound, we introduce first some of his published pieces, written since his arrival in Canada. We would humbly suggest that the following lines be set to music. They are well worthy of this honour, and would, we feel convinced, be greatly appreciated if more generally known:—

THE LAKE OF THE THOUSAND ISLES.

"Though Mis ouri's tide majestic may glide,
There's a curse on the soil it laves;
The Ohio, too, may be fair, but who
Would sojourn in a land of slaves?
Be my prouder lot a Ca adian cot,
And the bread of a freeman's toils;
Then hurrah for the land of the forests grand,
And the Lake of the Thousand Isles.

I would seek no wealth, at the cost of health,
'Mid the city's din and strife;
For I love the grace of fair Nature's face,
And the calm of a wealthless life;
I would shun the road by ambition trod
And the love which the heart defiles;—
Then hurrah for the land of the forest grand,
And the Lake of the Thousand Isles.

O away, away! I would gladly stray
Where the freedom of love is found;
Where the pine and oak by the woodman's stroke
Are disturbed in their ancient bound;
Where the gladsome swain reaps the golden grain,
And the trout from the stream beguiles;
Then hurrah for the land of the forests grand,
And the Lake of the Thousand Isles."

McColl well describes the Chaudiere Falls, as they appeared when the following verses were written. The "isle" alluded to has since disappeared, and not a trace of it now remains:—

THE CHAUDIERE.

"Where the Ottawa pours its magnificent tide
Through forests primeval, dark-waving and wide,
There's a scene which for grandeur has scarcely a peer—
'Tis the wild roaring rush of the mighty Chaudiere.

On, onward it dashes—an ocean of spray;
How madly it lashes each rock on its way!
Like the onset of hosts, when spear breaks against spear,
Is the omnipotent sweep of the mighty Chaudiere.

See! see where it now from yon ledge wildly leaps,—
Less swift down some Alps the dread avalanche sweeps;
That vortex below may well agonize where
Right into its throat goes the mighty Chaudiere.

Evermore, evermore, when sheer downward it springs,
Its mist-mantle it weaves—its loud anthem it sings;
Yonder Isle in its path seems to quiver with fear—
It may well dread the shock of the mighty Chaudiere.

The proud conqueror's might is the boast of a day—
Thine, river majestic! endureth for aye;
Strange thought that just thus upon Time's infant ear,
Came the God-speaking voice of the mighty Chaudiere.

Though for lips uninspired it seems almost a crime
To be aught else than mute by a scene so sublime,
Could I voice all I feel as I gaze on it here,
How immortal in song were the mighty Chaudiere!"

Among McColl's best known pieces, "The Child of Promise" has a first place. It was written in Gaelic and translated by Dr. Blackie, of Edinburgh. We have all heard that translations are always inferior to the original, but on reading this beautiful production we cannot well perceive how the Gaelic could be better. The last two verses are particularly beautiful:—

THE CHILD OF PROMISE.

"She died—as die the roses
On the ruddy clouds of dawn,
When the envious sun discloses
His flame and morning's gone.

She died—like snow glad-gracing
Some sea-marge fair, when lo!
Rude waves each other chasing,
Quick hide it 'neath their flow.

She died—like snow fast showering
Some sea-marge, when, anon,
In comes the wave devouring—
The beautiful is gone.

She died—as dies the glory
Of music's sweetest swell:
She died—as dies the story
When the beat is still to tell!

She died—as dies moon—beaming
When scowls the rayless wave;
She died—like sweetest dreaming
That hastens to its grave.

She died—and died she early:
Heaven wearied for its own.
As the dipping sun, my Mary,
Thy morning ray went down!

ure of Mr. McColl's poetry. Hugh Miller said, "There is more of fancy than of imagination in his poetry, and more of thought and imagery than of feeling. Comparison and ideality are the leading features of his mind. Some of his pieces are sparkling tissues of comparison from beginning to end."

Among his patriotic pieces, "The Highland Emigrant's Farewell," is well known. "John Bull on His Travels" is an amusing description of an Englishman's weakness; "Erin Machree" is a spirit-stirring poem on the beauties of Ireland, and a prayer to Heaven to guard her and make her again the envied of nations—the Erin of yore. We must content ourselves by merely naming these, and quoting for the benefit especially of Scotchmen, and as a final piece, a few verses of his well-known

"BONNET, KILT AND FEATHER."

Air "The Black Watch," or "Over The Water to Charlie."

When time was young, and Adam strung
His leafy garb together,
Then first were planned the outlines grand
Of bonnet, kilt and feather.

CHORUS—
O! dear to me as life can be
The land where blooms the heather,
And doubly dear the lads who wear
The bonnet, kilt and feather.

Your dandy vaunts his skin-tight pants,
Just fit such things to tether,
But give to me, all flowing free
The bonnet, kilt and feather.

For lordly hall or courtly ball
When all that's grand foregather,
There's nothing seen to match the sheen
Of bonnet, kilt and feather.

The gorgeousness of Solomon's dress
Put Sheba's queen thro'ther,
A proof to me his majesty
Dressed in the kilt and feather!

O, garb renowned the whole world round—
What mortal man would swither
To toast with me now three times three—
The bonnet, kilt and feather.

A Judge's Little Joke on His Friend.

Since the great Chief Justice Lemuel Shaw, no Judge in Massachusetts has been so celebrated for his power and peculiarities as the late Judge Otis P. Lord. During the sixteen years that Judge Lord sat upon the Superior bench it was gall and wormwood to him that his hurried decisions at nisi prius were to be carefully scrutinized and often overruled by the Supreme Judicial Court. His complaints were constant and at times were loud over what he considered unfair treatment by the higher court. At times he could not or would not speak of that honorable body with patience, and his hostility to certain of the Judges was well known. It was supposed by most lawyers that should opportunity come to him he would refuse a promotion which would necessitate sitting upon the same bench with Judges for whose legal attainments he had so often expressed contempt; and when, in 1875, his name was sent in as successor to Judge Wells upon the Supreme Court bench many looked to see the honor declined. For a number of days, indeed, it was generally reported that Judge Lord was hesitating in the matter, and even his intimate friends had doubts about his acceptance. One morning, as the late Stephen E. Ives, who probably possessed more of Judge Lord's confidence than any other member of the bar at least, was entering the court-house, he met the Judge, coming down from the lobby. "Well, Judge," he said, "have you decided about going on to the Supreme bench?" Looking him squarely in the face, Judge Lord gravely replied: "Stephen, I have thought the matter over as to where I could be of the most use, and have concluded to remain where I am." "But, Judge," expostulated his friend, "you should not be hasty in this matter." "It's no use, Stephen," interrupted the Judge, "I tell you I have absolutely made up my mind to stay where I am." "But, Judge," continued Mr. Ives, "I am terribly disappointed, and you will grieve all your friends if you insist upon this course." "I think not, Stephen, I think not," said Judge Lord, as he laid his hand kindly upon the shoulder of his tried and trusted friend, "for," he continued in an exultant voice, "I have this morning qualified as a Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, and," he added more gravely and quietly, "I hope I shall live long enough now to show them that I do know a little law."

Thirteen at Dinner.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH.

It is 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and here I am all ready, freshly shaved, my hair well brushed, and my cravat tied to perfection. The cut of my coat do credit to my tailor, and actually improves my figure. My pantaloons set admirably over my boots, and I may say that my appearance is in every way thoroughly satisfactory. I am trying to force my hands into 7½ gloves, although I always wear 8's, but to-day I must appear in my best, for I am to dine for the first time with the family of my fiancee, my Cecile, my adorable Cecile, with whom I am madly in love, and who will be my wife in two months—sixty-one days, 1,464 hours, 87,840 minutes. See how I count the time! She is so pretty, this Cecile of mine, with golden hair, smooth brow, black eyes, and "tip tilted" nose, her rosy cheeks, coral lips, pearly teeth, roguish chin, graceful neck, slender fingers, little hands, and delicate feet.

I saw her for the first time fifty-four weeks ago at Villers-sur-Mer, a charming place. I was so happy there! To see and fall in love with Cecile was the work of a single day. To obtain an introduction to her parents became my one aim in life—an aim which I soon attained, thanks to an old friend of my family who gave me the best of recommendations on the score of morals and financial standing. I have a fixed income of 6,000 francs, besides which I make from 7,000 to 8,000 francs a year through a stock-broker, who has considerable respect for my business ability. I am 30 years old, and an orphan; without being handsome, I am not bad looking. I have white teeth and a good figure. I possess, I believe, all the qualifications which a young lady can ask for in her husband, or parents require in a son-in-law. So I have been accepted. Imagine my happiness? From to-morrow I can call every evening from 7 to 10 to advance my suit; and in an hour and a half I am to be formally presented to Cecile's near and remote relatives. So do not be astonished at the pains I am taking with my toilet, or at the time I am devoting to the mirror; it is my custom. But Moliere has said:

"Where a lover's heart is, there he pays all attendance, and seeks to win favor on every side. Rather than have any opposition to his suit he tries to make friends with even the household dog."

And, by the way, I must put some lumps of sugar in my pocket for Bijou; he is my mother-in-law's lap-dog, the idol before which I have to bow down. Oh! the wretched little beast. As often as he shows his yellow teeth at me, I quiet him with sugar. He is no longer a dog, but a walking confectionery store; he staggers beneath the weight of the sweets with which I stuff him. The tears which are constantly running from his eyes crystallize on his silky hair into little balls of sugar candy. My mother-in-law, who is devoted to this animal, has also an extremely favorable opinion of me, and she does not doubt for an instant that the man who has been able to gain Bijou's liking is worthy of entering her family, and will render her daughter perfectly happy. Oh! you snarling little brute, your life would not be long enough to consume all the sugar I should gladly give you! Twenty minutes after five! I must start, jump into a coupe, and buy a bouquet for my Cecile. By the time I reach the Place-Royale, where she lives, it will be half-past 6.

Good! my bouquet is beautiful—white lilacs and orange flowers. I reach the house, my heart is beating; it is two days since I have seen Cecile, Cecile! what a lovely name! I ring, the door is opened, I enter, and lay aside my overcoat; the maid takes my bouquet and raises it to her nose; I think her impertinent, and probably my face reflects my thoughts, for she quickly hands me the bouquet, blushes to her ears, and opens the parlor door. Oh! happiness! My Cecile is alone with her mother, no one has yet arrived, the dinner hour is 7. I kiss madame's hand, and turn towards the piano where my Cecile is letting her fingers wander carelessly over the keys, producing arpeggios, sweet chords and delightful harmonies. The coquette pretends not to see me, so that when I shall come close to her side she can utter a little scream which will make her blush becomingly, and will send a startled look into her lovely eyes; whereupon I shall soothe her very easily. See how prettily she is already smiling at me. But what is the matter with my mother-in-law? Why such a melancholy expression? Can it be that Bijou is sick! No; he is yawning over there upon his cushion. Has M. Miraul, my father-in-law, been buying Turkish securities? What is that paper which she finds so absorbing? Oh! mon Dieu! it may be an anonymous letter in which some devoted friend informs her that I am a gambler, a pirate, thief, or assassain. With my heart in my mouth I go up to her to calm my fears. She looks at me with a tragic air, and, as she hands me the letter, says:

"See, if we are not unlucky? Read, read!"

MY DEAR EULALIE: That stupid Ignace has been detained at school. Remove his place, for I shall come alone, and believe me your devoted cousin,

ANASTASIE BARDOT.

"Well, what of it?" I say in astonishment.

"What of it?" cries Madame Miraul, sinking back into her chair, "why, matter enough, we shall be thirteen at table!"

At this my Cecile rises, and at the same time presses heavily upon the piano, the piano producing a strange and not altogether melodious sound. Bijou howls, for the discord grates upon his delicate ear.

"Thirteen at table," repeats Madame, "thirteen on the day you are presented; that is a sign of the greatest misfortunes; the death of some one of us before the end of the year is certain if we do not avoid that fatal number."

"But, madame we can seat two of the guests at a little table."

"What difference would that make, should we not still be thirteen?" replied my mother-in-law. "Mon Dieu! help me. How can I find a fourteenth in the little time that is left. Oh! that wretched Ignace!"

And she presses her feverish hand to her forehead, heedless of the ruin she is working in her frizzes; in two seconds her hair will look like Bijou's. But what would it matter to her? That inexorable and fatal number thirteen!

"What shall I do, what shall I do?" she moans in despair; "half-past 6, and we dine at 7."

"Don't feel so. Is there not some one in the neighborhood whom you know well enough to invite at a moment's notice?"

"No."

"Have you not some friend who does not live too far away? I can jump into a carriage, explain the circumstances to him, and bring him back with you."

"Oh! how good you are, my child! Oh, yes; do this for me; go to our friend Burns' house. He is as regular as clockwork in his habits, and sits down to dinner at 7 in full-dress; he has all the Englishman's regard for etiquette. You must explain to him just what has happened. Use all your powers of persuasion, be irresistible, and bring him back with you in some way, even if you have to use force. He lives at No. 12, Faubourg Poissoniere."

"But what shall I do if he is not there?"

"Well! well! bring the first one of your friends whom you meet."

I get into the carriage and am on my way to the Faubourg Poissoniere. I reach the house and ring.

"Is M. Burns in?" I say to the servant.

"He is sick," she replies.

"Mon Dieu! Mademoiselle, I am very anxious to see M. Burns, although I have not the honor of his acquaintance, for I come in behalf of Madame Miraul, who wishes to ask of him a favor."

"I do not think that Monsieur can see you. He has been suffering all day, and the doctor prescribed a two-hours' bath which he has just begun——"

"I press it no further, Mademoiselle. Pray do not even mention to him that I called. The favor which Madame Miraul desired was that he should dine with her——"

"Oh! Monsieur, that is impossible. The doctor ordered the strictest diet."

I go down the staircase four steps at a time, saying to myself: "What shall I do? I must find a guest." I look at my watch—twelve minutes to 7. I have only just time to return. I implore all the saints of heaven to send some friend in my way, even some presentable acquaintance. I have come to the Chateau d' Eau—no one—no one anywhere. It is enough to drive a man wild! I am becoming angry and begin to realize that my mother-in-law is full of whims. But yet it is just now necessary for me to humor them. I tell the driver to go slowly. Five minutes left. With my head out of the window I stare at everyone, for I have made up my mind to invite the first man I see with a dress coat. No dress coat in sight. We are reaching the Place Royale; there is no help for it; I must give it up. I pay the driver, and while he makes me wait for my change I examine all the passers-by in a hopeless, mechanical way.

Am I deceived? Have I not seen that jovial face somewhere before? and he has on a dress coat! Saved! Mon Dieu! Saved! If he is willing to come with me, I shall use force! I rush up to a little man who is walking along with a self-sustained air. He looks happy, is very fat, and very red; he has a dress coat, white cravat and no gloves, but they must be in his pocket. He is quite presentable. I am sure I know him—I have seen that head on some one's shoulders—I hold out my hand to him.

"Well, how are you? Mon Dieu! but I am glad to meet you!"

"Monsieur does me too much honor," replies the little man with a most profound provincial accent. "Do you need my services; quick, I have my case with me?"

"He is a physician," I say to myself. "What luck! My dear Monsieur—Monsieur—"

"Saint-Phar, at your service."

"Oh, yes! No, my health is excellent, but I have a tremendous appetite. How is it with you?"

"Oh, my appetite is something stupendous! I am the greatest eater in Provence."

"Ah! my dear M. Saint-Phar, if you would only do me the favor of coming to dine with me here with some intimate friends of mine."

"But Monsieur, you honor and surprise me. It is a mark of great esteem which you are offering me. I do not know these people."

"That makes not the least difference. Presented by me you will be cordially received. You are in evening dress. you have a white cravat; it is marvelously fortunate."

"I always dress in this way, for my practice is becoming more and more distinguished and fashionable. For all this I am indebted to your friend, M. de Bremond, who gave me introductions."

"Oh, yes! It was at his house that I met you. Have you been attending him for some time?"

"For two years, Monsieur, and I can say, without boasting, that he ought to be very grateful to me, for I assure you that, were it not for me, he would not be able to walk to-day."

"Oh, but you are a rare man, and you must allow me to present you to my new family. Yes; I am about to marry, and it surely is my lucky star which made me meet you. The family is large, there are old men to whom you will be indispensable. I promise you, in advance, new patients. Forget that we are only acquaintances; treat me as a friend, dear doctor, and accept an invitation which, although somewhat informal, will yet be the first step towards a friendship based upon the great respect which I entertain for learning."

The little doctor's face changed from red to white; he took my hand and almost crushed it between both of his. I never saw larger hands than the doctor's. Nature had to economize in his height to give him such hands. In spite of this peculiarity, which effectually robs him of all distinction, he has a fair appearance; and, besides, he is received by M. de Bremond, who is a man of excellent position, and very exclusive in the choice of friends and acquaintances. Then, too, he is M. de Bremond's physician, which stamps him as a man of ability; and, above all, I have no choice. It must be he or no one.

Saint-Phar plunges his hand into his pockets and pulls out three pairs of gloves, black, gray and white.

"Still, for the sake of my patients," he says with a quiet smile.

He chooses the white gloves, draws them on, and in consequence has no longer hands, but veritable monuments.

"I warn you, my dear sir, that I must leave immediately after dinner. I have made an absolute engagement to see a patient from 9 to 10."

"You shall have perfect liberty. It is all that we could ask if you spare us two hours of time, so precious and useful to mankind. Follow me, dear doctor; it is on the second floor—I promise you welcome worthy of yourself."

"Announce M. Saint-Phar," I say to the maid.

All the guests have arrived, and must be thinking that the prospective bridegroom is not in much of a hurry. The parlor door opens, disclosing the whole company sitting in a circle. I am conscious that their eyes are fixed upon me, and that I am passing under review. But I encounter the sweet smile of my Cecile and am comforted.

"M. de Saint-Phar!" announces the maid, ennobling my new friend' "and M. Adrien Rony."

Madame Miraul advances to meet us, saying to me:

"We have been impatiently awaiting you!"

"You will excuse me, madame, and permit me to present to you my friend, Doctor Saint-Phar, who has kindly consented to join us, and take part in a family dinner."

"It gives me great pleasure to meet you, Monsieur," replies Madame Miraul; "you see it is an informal dinner, wholly without ceremony."

The sixty candles and sixty lamps make an illumination that rivals the light of day; the ladies' dresses are elaborate, the gentlemen are all in full evening costume.

If this is informal, mon Dieu! What must a formal dinner be?

The introductions begin; first M. Miraul's brother and his wife, good common-place people from Marais. Then an old aunt, deaf as a post, but, in spite of her infirmity, very distinguished in appearance. Then a venerable uncle on the maternal side, a retired Commander, decorated with the ribbon of the Legion of Honor. Poor old fellow, a bullet plowed through his feet at the siege of Sebastopol. He is a little crotchety, but a noble man at heart. A cousin and her husband, people from the country; the husband is a notary; the wife must be ill-natured, for nothing kind can come from those pinched lips. Then her son, a great stupid fellow of about 19, who blushes when anyone looks at him. And last of all Madame Miraul's sister, Aunt Charlotte, a lady of 40, who was once a beauty and is still pretty, reminding one somewhat of Cecile, in that she is spirituelle and sympathetic, although a little sad. She is a widow, without children, and has centered all her affections on Cecile, who loves her dearly. There is missing only Cousin Anastasia Bardot, the mother of the stupid Ignace; but as it is a habit of hers to arrive after the soup, we do not wait for her, but pass into the dining-room. The cook is in despair, for we are already quarter of an hour late. The room is no less brilliantly lighted than the parlor; there is a great display of flowers, candles and silver. Saint-Phar has offered his arm to Madame Miraul, who says to him.

"You see, Monsieur, there is absolutely no ceremony; kindly take your place between the Commander—who will be glad of your company, and to whom you can talk about your profession, for he has consulted, I believe, all of your medical brethren—and my Aunt Bouret, whom I especially commend to you; she is quite deaf, but she understands everything by watching the movements of the lips.

Saint-Phar, already seeing two new patients in the Commander and Aunt Bouret, rushes to his seat. Unfortunately, Bijou, who always follows close upon the heels of his mistress, gets in the way of Saint-Phar, who steps upon his paw.

Bijou howls, Madame Miraul screams, takes the wounded dog into her arms and covers him with kisses. Poor Saint-Phar knows not what to do.

"My dear," says M. Miraul, "why do you not shut up Bijou in your chamber when you have company? What a state of excitement you are in!"

"Anatole! do not meddle with what does not concern you," replied Madame Miraul angrily. "Poor little Bijou! Poor little dear! Get some arnica to make a compress."

The servants scatter in every direction, and during all this time the soup, which is already served, is getting cold.

The dog is bandaged and laid upon his cushion, and, as I have lavishly supplied him with sugar, he condescends to keep quiet and go to sleep. Peace is restored.

We begin upon the soup, still Madame Bardot does not come. At last the bell rings. It is she.

No; it is a telegram!

Have counted—we should be thirteen at dinner; will come after dinner.

ANASTASIE.

Madame Miraul becomes as pale as her napkin, and her husband as red as she is pale. My Cecile is troubled, and I look at Saint-Phar, who is making his soup disappear with astounding celerity. Then he washes it down with a generous draught of wine, smacks his lips, winks at M. Miraul, and murmurs:

"It is exquisite."

But no one replies; the whole company is terrified, and each one is counting to make sure that we really are thirteen. There is no denying it, my Cecile's family are very superstitious. I see no one who looks undisturbed except the deaf aunt, and Saint-Phar, who is making away with all the side-dishes within his reach. It is not possible that this man has had anything to eat for a week! And all my trouble resulted in making thirteen at the table! It is simply fate. I no longer dare to raise my eyes, for I feel the reproachful look of Madame Miraul fixed upon me. But it is not my fault; she told me to bring another guest even if I had to employ force, and I brought one. She must blame her cousin Anastasie, not me. I cannot with any decency tell Saint-Phar to leave. How he irritates me now; he seems to be twice as common as before. His hands are real paws; he does not eat, he gormandizes, and he drinks like a fish. And, then, what kind of a man can he be who accepts a dinner from people whom he does not know? How could I have invited that uncouth fellow, and presented him as my friend?

Oh! human nature, you are always the same! While a man can help us we endow him with all good qualities; but the instant he ceases to be of use, we call him an intruder and show him the door. That unending comedy is played on every round of the social ladder from the lowest to the highest.

Each of us tries to appear natural, and as the dinner is excellent, and the wines abundant and varied, we gradually regain our cheerfulness.

Madame Miraul alone looks gloomy.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

In order to make room for Xmas stock, now coming in, Sailsbury Bros. are offering bargains—20 to 30 per cent discount.

A Wild Elucidater.

Rev. Dr. Wild, the Bond Street seer, will throw some light on "A Masonic Mystery," at Bradburn's Opera House, on Wednesday October 28th. Seats are sure to be at a premium, and those desiring to hear the lecture should secure their seats at once.

Something Worth Hearing.

Dr. Wild always says something worth hearing whenever he mounts the platform, but when he handles such a such a subject as "A Masonic Mystery," the public may expect a most interesting and absorbing oration. Bradburn's Opera House, on Wednesday, Oct. 28th.

A Happy Combination.

We have to thank Messrs. Sailsbury & Bro. for a specimen copy of their Combined Scribbling-book and Dictionary, which will prove an invaluable aid to school pupils in the prosecution of their studies. The first half is a scribbling-book, with which is stitched a complete dictionary, octavo size, with table of foreign words and phrases and rules for spelling.

A Narrow Escape.

While Mr. C. W. Sawers was out driving the other day with two of his children, one of them, a little boy of five, fell out of the phaeton, and before Mr. Sawers could pull up was under the wheel. The frightened parent hardly knew whether to back up or drive on a step, as the little fellow was under the wheel, with the whole weight of the phaeton resting on him. He chose the latter course, and was delighted to see his little son jump up apparently unhurt, although the wheel had passed right over his collar bone. Beyond a little soreness he had sustained no injury, which is a matter of wonder, as the phaeton was a heavy one.

Prof. Dorenwend is Coming.

It will be seen in another column that the great hair goods artist, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, will be in Peterborough at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 26th, 27th and 28th. He will have with with him a large stock of his excellent goods, such as Langtry, Parisian and Pompadour bangs, water waves, switches, ladies' wigs, gents' wigs and Toupees, &c. All who are in need of something neat, becoming and stylish in this line, should not fail to visit him and see his magnificent stock. It is a well-known fact that he is the leading hair goods manufacturer of Canada, and spares no labor and expense in being up to the times, and giving satisfaction to his customers and patrons. Remember he will be here for three days only at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26th, 27th and 28th.

Praiseworthy.

We understand that the officers and members of Otonabee Lodge No. 13, I.O.O.F., have decided to form a "Choral Society," for the twofold purpose of giving, in the first place, the ladies and gentlemen of our town who are lovers of music, especially in the form of choruses, an opportunity for training, and also of giving our citizens really first-class entertainments during the coming winter months. Prof. Miller will, we believe, take the leadership, while Mr. Hampshire, organist of St. John's Church, will act as pianist. If an opinion may be ventured, two gentlemen better qualified could not be selected from our midst. The lodge has very generously decided that the membership shall be free, both for ladies and gentlemen, and the rehearsals will take place in their beautiful rooms on George street every Tuesday night, until further notice. The society (which numbers about 40) will continue the practice of that beautiful cantata, "Daniel," which they will, when perfect, render in public. The lodge is certainly to be praised for their action in this matter, when we consider that in other towns those who love music must pay for it, and no doubt its efforts will meet with generous appreciation.

Mr. Baxter's Lectures.

Rev. Mr. Baxter addressed a large audience again last evening in St. Paul's Church on "Coming Events."

Thanksgiving Day.

The date of Thanksgiving day has been changed from Saturday, November 7th, to Thursday, November 12th.

The Scott Act.

Judge Dennistoun took some further evidence in connection with the late Scott Act voting, yesterday, and is engaged to-day in making further investigation regarding it.

Secure Your Seats

In good time for Dr. Wild's interesting lecture on a "Masonic Mystery." Bradburn's Opera House will be crowded on October 28th, and those who do not promptly secure seats will be unwise.

Police Court.

Patrick Cavanagh, who was arrested last evening by P. C. R. Adams, was charged before the Police Magistrate this morning, with drunk and disorderly conduct. He admitted the offence, and was fined $2.

Shipments of Cheese.

Mr. Cook, of Belleville, who was one of the largest buyers at the last cheese market held here, yesterday shipped three car loads for Liverpool market, and is shipping another two car loads brought in from the Victoria county factories to-day. Very little remains on hand at the factories.

Mr. Earl's Class.

Mr. Barton Earl's ladies' class, in the critical reading of English literature, will reassemble next week for the fall and winter term. The preliminary meeting will be held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on Tuesday afternoon, the 27th inst., at 4:15 o'clock. Those wishing to join are respectfully requested to attend.

Altogether Mistaken.

The Lindsay Post, taking its cue from the Review, gives currency to the inaccurate statement that the Peterborough Board of Education had refused teachers of the town leave to attend a teachers' convention. How could the board refuse a request that had not been preferred, and which, if properly preferred, would not be refused? The Post should learn by experience not to trust implicitly to the source of information, it relied on on this occasion.

A Handsome Design.

Mr. Thomas C. Hanley, of Belleville, the architect of Mr. Cox's new house on Hunter street, occupied by Mr. J. H. Roper, has just completed plans for a handsome new residence, in modern style, for Mr. James C. Dale, of Madoc. The house will be of white brick, three stories, with mansard roof of slate, finished by handsome iron cresting. It will contain 15 rooms, and will be fitted throughout with all modern conveniences, hot air, bath rooms, &c. The elevation shows a very imposing design, there being five verandahs and an elaborate porch over the entrance, and the house, when completed, will be a credit to its designer and an acquisition to the architecture of Madoc. Mr. Hanley was in town to-day looking after materials for the construction of the house.

Wedding Bells at Lakefield.

Lakefield was the scene, yesterday afternoon, of the delightful little social sensation that attends a wedding. The occasion was the marriage of Mr. T. H. Knox, assistant manager of the Dunn Wiman Mercantile Agency, Toronto, to Miss Minnie, daughter of Mr. John C. Sherin, the occasion also marking the anniversary of the latter's birth. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Wm. McFarlane, at the residence of the brother-in-law of the bride, Mr. S. Henderson, in the presence of a large number of guests. The duties of bridesmaid were performed by Miss Friane, elocutionist of Whitby Ladies' College, and the groom was supported by his brother, Mr. James Knox. The bride looked charming in a rich dress of ruby silk plush, with natural flowers and gold jewelry, as ornaments. The bridesmaid was attired in old gold satan, with cream lace over-dress. The presents to the bride were numerous and beautiful, among them being an unique silver tea set, the gift of the manager and employes of the Dunn Wiman agency. After the wedding dejeuner, the happy pair drove to Peterboro', and this morning took the train for Toronto and the west. In the evening the guests enjoyed a very pleasant season of social intercourse, Mrs. Henderson's graceful hospitality adding zest to the enjoyment of the occasion. The EXAMINER adds its cordial congratulations and best wishes to those of the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Knox.

Riel Re-reprieved.

His Execution Postponed Till November the 11th.

OTTAWA, Oct. 22.—At a Cabinet meeting to-day it was decided to again postpone Riel's execution—till November 11th.

The French Canadians here still express confidence that Riel will not be hanged. They base their hopes on the recommendation to mercy of the Regina jury and the influence of the Quebec Ministers.

Smallpox Scare.

Some uneasiness was caused in town this morning by wild rumors that were flying around to the effect that the much dreaded smallpox had at length made its appearance here. Inquiry proves, however, that as is usual in such cases, busy tongues have been making a mountain out of a mole hill. The facts are as follows. It was this morning reported to Dr. Clarke, the medicial health officer, that a case had appeared in the family of James Martin, who resides on George street, between Charlotte and King street. On visiting the house he found that a young child was suffering from a very mild form of varioloid. Immediate steps were taken to prevent any spread of the disease; the whole family were ordered to be vaccinated, and the house placarded and placed under strict quarantine. It is believed that these precautions will be sufficient to prevent any further danger.

COMMENDABLE PROMPTITUDE.

We are sure that every citizen who reads the report in another column of the action of the Board of Health at their meeting last night will heartily endorse the course pursued, and give the Board due credit for the prompt action they have taken. The public will assuredly endorse any expenditure, however great, that may be legitimately necessary. Small-pox is a terrible visitant, but with prompt and thorough sanitary precautions it is possible to stamp it out. Montreal foolishly trifled with the scourge, fatuously refusing to adopt proper precautions, till the disease has gained such a foothold that its eradication is almost impossible. Already this month the deaths, which amount to about fifty per day, have reached the terrible total of 1,000, while the commercial and industrial loss must be reckoned by millions. From Montreal, as a centre, it distribution throughout this Province is bound to obtain to a greater or less extent. But the efficiency of our Provincial Board of Health, whose benefit and utility have never been sufficiently appreciated till now, tends to rob the danger of a spread of smallpox in an epidmic form, of its terrors. The report of the medical officers appointed by the Provincial Board of Health, shows that the total number of cases in the province of Ontario from the first of June to midnight on October 19th were as follows:—

Cornwall, one family, all well; no second cases.

Cardinal, one family, one second case; all now well.

Dickinson's Landing, one case; no second case at present.

Kenyon township, Glengarry, one case; no second case.

Ottawa, four cases of distinct importation; none at present.

Port Hope, one case; no second case.

Toronto, six distinct importations; none at present.

Hamilton, one imported case, four others of same family sick: two died Monday last.

St. Catherines, six cases in all from importation, one sick at present; one died.

Berlin, one case; no second case.

London, one case at present.

Perth, one case at present.

Lancaster township, one case at present.

This is proof positive that proper and prompt action will prevent the spread of smallpox, and furnishes ample justification of the action taken by our Board of Health last night. With a Board disposed to deal promptly with the emergency that has arisen and may at any time arise while Montreal is a pest centre, the people of the town can enjoy a comparative feeling of security, which will be doubly intensified if there is a general co-operation on the part of the public by a general recourse to vaccination.

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 23.—The question of the constitutionality of the Liquor License Act passed by the Dominion Parliament, will come before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the 11th November, on appeal from the judgment of the Canadian Supreme Court.

British China Mails.

TORONTO, Oct. 23.—A special cable to the Globe says that the Imperial post office authorities are now advertising for tenders for the conveyance of mails from Coal Harbor, British Columbia, to the island of Hong Kong, and from Hong Kong to Coal Harbor. The advertisement calls for a fortnightly service, and it is to be made by way of Yokohoma on both the outward and return journeys. The present contracts for the conveyance of the British mails to China terminate on the 31st January, 1888. Tenders in response to the present offers may be sent in up to the 31st March, 1886. This is regarded here as an important recognition of the Canadian Pacific route.

The Board of Health Moves.

Prompt Measures Inaugurated.

A meeting of the Board of Health was held last evening in the Council Chamber. There were present Messrs. Rutherford, Green, Hartley, McNaughton, Pearce, Garvey and Dr. Fife. Messrs. Cahill, Douglas, Menzies and Yelland, who are not members of the Board, were also present. Mr. Rutherford was called to the chair and explained the reason for calling the meeting, and requested Dr. Clarke, the Medical Health officer, to give a statement of the facts. That gentleman detailed the appearance of the case of small-pox, as reported in yesterday's EXAMINER and explained what precautions had been taken.

Dr. King, who afterwards came in, expressed the opinion that it would be safer to entirely isolate the entire family in which the

The Board were unanimous in the opinion that no effort nor expense should be spared to at once stamp out the smallpox, and it was agreed to secure the site on which the smallpox hospital was located 12 years ago, and erect a building at once to which the Martin family will be removed.

THE MEASURES ADOPTED.

A committee consisting of the Chairman and Messrs Hartley and Garvey was appointed, and given full power to make all necessary arrangement for the building, medical attendance and necessary supplies, and to take any steps they might deem necessary to stamp out the malady.

The Board then adjourned and the committee at once went to work and as a result of their labours Mr. J. D. Baptie will to-day erect a building 20x28, one story high, with three rooms, sheeted inside and out with felt paper, and with shingled roof, on the chosen site. The building will cost $125, and be ready for occupation to-night.

The services of Dr. Job were secured to attend the case, and he will devote his whole time to the case.

As soon as the family are removed from their present residence the bedding and house will be disinfected and every necessary precaution be taken.

Much credit is due to the Board of Health for their prompt and energetic action, and there is little to be feared from the present outbreak.

Peterborough Appreciated.

The Richmond County Democrat, published at Tomkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., is evidently in love with Peterborough. Its last issue contains the following in relation to "Our Canadian Cousins:"—

To the many readers of the Democrat who believe the manifest destiny of Canada is to become a State of the Great Republic the news will be welcome that during a recent trip thither by a representative of this paper enough was seen to convince him that that country is prosperous and enterprising enough to be a most desirable acquisition. The town of Peterborough, Canada West, for instance illustrates this statement. It is perhaps one of the most progressive of all the minor communities. It has grown rapidly, its dwelling are comfortable and neat, each family residing in its own house; the principal streets are lighted by electricity, others by gas, while an excellent water supply is obtained from the lakes and the Otonabee river. Saw mills, woollen mills and flour mills are numerous, all driven by water power, which at this place is most efficient. There are three newspapers, the Review, a Conservative organ, the EXAMINER, a Reform organ, and the Times, an independent. All are dailies, the first two being issued in the evening, the last in the morning. They are bright and newsy, with well appointed printing offices. There is a fine Catholic cathedral in the place, which was recently extensively improved, at which there is stationed a Bishop, besides the pastor, Reverend Father Conway. The market place is an interesting sight on market days—Wednesday and Saturday—when from a multitude of wagons ranged about the open square the farmers who have driven in from the adjacent country dispose of the finest farm produce, poultry, etc., at remarkably low prices. Chickens and ducks at from 35 to 60 cents a pair illustrate the prevailing moderate charges, something possible only by reason of the absence of middlemen between the producer and consumer. Altogether Peterborough contains the energy, intelligence, and material prosperity characteristic of an enterprising place, although it also has a law which will compel visitors from the "States" hereafter to bring with them their own supply of whiskey and in a pocket flask capable of holding ten gallons.

[The EXAMINER, on behalf of the town, duly appreciates the complimentary remarks of our contemporary, but we can assure the Democrat that the allusion to the annexation of Canada doesn't awake the faintest spectre of an echo. We have a protective tariff and that's about all we can stand at present. We prefer to "bear the ills we have than fly to others we know not of" by submitting to annexation.

Prof. Dorenwend is Coming.

It will be seen in another column that the great hair goods artist, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, will be in Peterborough at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 26th, 27th and 28th. He will have with with him a large stock of his excellent goods, such as Langtry, Parisian and Pompadour bangs, water waves, switches, ladies' wigs, gents' wigs and Toupees, &c. All who are in need of something neat, becoming and stylish in this line, should not fail to visit him and see his magnificent stock. It is a well-known fact that he is the leading hair goods manufacturer of Canada, and spares no labor and expense in being up to the times, and giving satisfaction to his customers and patrons. Remember he will be here for three days only at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26th, 27th and 28th.

A Correction.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—will you allow me space to correct an utterly false rumor to the effect that there is a case of small pox in Mr. Jos. Brault's Montreal House hotel, Aylmer street. There is nothing of the kind. The only person ill in the house is Mrs. Brault, who has been ill for some time with an affection of the lungs.

Yours truly,

Unequally Distributed.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I would like to know why the city fathers would explain through the medium of your paper how it is that gas lamps have been placed on Water street north, between Smith and Argyle streets, where there are only eight houses, while none have been placed on George street north, between Smith and Argyle streets, where there are sixteen houses. Awaiting light on the above, I remain,

Yours truly,

A Moulder "Speaks his Mind."

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I wish through the columns of your paper to correct an erroneous opinion which prevails to a certain extent in this town with regard to the employes of the Stove Works, caused in a great measure by the untruthful statement made in the Times on last Monday. I may prefence my remarks, however, by saying that I do not pose as the defender of wrong doing. That a disturbance did take place on a public street, and a policeman was assaulted while in discharge of his duty, has already been proved, but any person taking up the number of the Times referred to, would come to the conclusion that the moulders in the Peterboro' Stove Works were escaped convicts, or cannibals. But, sir, I can get several respectable men to prove most of the statements in the Times false. It says that Mr. Adams was assaulted by eight toughs. The policeman himself proved in court that only four men attacked him. It also states that the foundry men started the row in a leading hotel on last Friday night. That row was begun by a citizen of this town as the proprietor of the hotel in question can testify. Two foundry men, with a dozen others, happened to be present and got mixed in the melee with several others. Again the Times extends its imagination and states that two moulders from the Stove Works called on a Times reporter and made threats. No Stove Foundry moulders here ever spoke to a Times reporter. He constituted himself guardian of the peace for this town of 10,000 inhabitants when he says the moulders must not run the town. Pooh! The Times cannot run the stove men. I would like to know what spleen this newspaper has against those men. We are sorry that some of our number transgressed the law, but it is unfair to blame all for the acts of two. Of this we feel confident that any of our number can produce as good characters, in our native city, (Hamilton), as this libellous sheet can in Peterborough. I may state that the Stove Works are open at any time for visitors who may see and form their opinion of the men who have been so disgracefully libelled. Thanking you Mr. Editor, for so much valuable space,

I remain yours truly,
STOVE MOULDER.

THE BURMESE QUESTION.

For some time past the telegraphic despatches have been laden with references to the approaching troubles with Burmah, and the probability of a hostile encounter between the forces of King Theban, of atrocious notoriety, and the British forces in India. Under the circumstances, an outline of the origin of the trouble will be read with interest. A trading company, the Bombay and Burmah Corporation, have held leases of extensive tracts in Burmah, abounding in teak timber, the trophical counterpart of British or Canadian oak. King Thebaw, who, like most tyrants, is always in need of funds, was, through the liberality of the corporation, allowed from time to time to collect his timber dues in advance. He anticipated his dues so largely that the corporation declined to advance further funds just as the monarch wanted money to provide for a grand feast. Thereupon he set up a bogus claim for stumpage dues on 50,000 teaks, representing about a million and a half of dollars. This claim was repudiated, and a remonstrance, sent to Thebaw, in the name of the Viceroy of India, only elicited an insolent reply, and the King has roused a spirit which will probably result in the annexation of Burmah to British India, for Lord Dufferin has advised armed intervention. Such a course will put an end to an iniquitous despotism. The King of Burmah is a cruel and ruthless tyrant, and the lives and possessions of his subjects are at the mercy of a wretch, who knows no mercy. The destruction of his authority and the annexation of his territory to British India, will be an inestimable blessing. The substitution of the elevating influences of Christianity, for a hideous heathanism, the substitution of the vigorous forces of civilization for the enervating results of despotism will secure the sympathy of the civilised world. There is no power to say England may if she decides on annexation. France with her contiguous territorial interests, might have objected before her disastrous Tonquin experience cooled down her colonization fever. There is no danger of her doing so now. Britain's position in the East points to her as the natural absorbent of Burmah. Thebaw can offer little availing opposition with his poorly armed mob of 18,000 men which does does duty for an army. Little by little portions of his territory have passed under British rule, and the attitude he has assumed threatens the loss of the remainder with but little trouble. Even if the trouble were considerable the country to be reclaimed to civilization is worth a little hard fighting for. Its importance may be inferred from the fact that it embraces 200,000 square miles and has 4,000,000 inhabitants. The Irawady, a great river which flows through the territory, and whose delta, lying in Pegu, is already British, waters with its tributaries the whole country and affords a system of navigation to the foot of the far inland mountain ranges. The country is rich in minerals, including gold, silver, lead, precious stones, marble, petroleum and amber, and there are immense forests of teak. Large wells of petroleum are found near the capital, Ava, a city of some 50,000 inhabitants. The soil is fertile and the inhabitants are a hardy, athletic race, who take to mechanical pursuits more readily than most eastern peoples.

A Thanksgiving Number.

Godey's Lady's Book for November is a genuine thanksgiving number, calculated to cause gratitude in the hearts of all its patrons. The steel engraved frontispiece "Without a Cause," is a capital study of child life—three little girls cuddling under an old umbrella, each with a diminutive pussy in her arms. Mrs. Mary Bradley has a charming poem in this issue, "At the Lock," which is illustrated by two handsome full-page process cuts. Helen Mathers' new serial "Love Lies A-Bleeding," begins in this number in a bright and engaging vein. Emily Reade has a clever story called "Madame Hortense's Portrait," which contains an account of hidden jewels in a secret panel. "The Yoke of Honor" ends satisfactorily this month, while Max Vander Weyde continues his interesting reports of Phillipa's doings in the article on "The Ossanic Club." This series that tells about women helping themselves in a pecuniary way has obtained great and well-merited popularity. Another strong feature of the magazine this month is Henry Campbell's account of a memorable murder, that is set forth in "The Confession of Victor Delue." "Eric's Legacy," "One Night's History," and "The Lost Opportunity," are all capital short stories, while the poems by George Birdseye, Mrs. De Fontaine, Minnie Macarthur and Charles L. Northrop help make up a number of extraordinary merit. We had thought before that Godey's was excellent, but this month she has truly excelled herself.

What Others Have Found Out.

A little borax put in the water in which scarlet napkins and red-bordered towels are to be washed will prevent them fading.

It is worth recollecting that bar soap should be cut into square pieces and put into a dry place, as it lasts better after shrinking.

By rubbing with a damp flannel dipped in the best whiting, the brown discoloration may be taken off cups in which custards have been baked.

Why purchase inferior nutmegs, when their quality can be tested by pricking them with a pin? If they are good the oil will instantly spread around the puncture.

Carpets, after the dust has been beaten out, may be brightened by scattering upon them cornmeal mixed with salt, and then sweeping it off; mix salt and meal in equal proportions.

Rub your black walnut sewing-machine, tables, your cabinet organ, or any other piece of solid furniture you may have, with a cloth moistened with kerosene oil, and you will quickly see an improvement, but keep it away from varnish.

When putting away the silver tea or coffee pot, which is not used every day, lay a little [illegible] the cover. This will allow fresh air to get in and prevent the mustiness of the contents, familiar to hotel and boarding-house sufferers.

Crape may be renovated by thoroughly brushing all dust from the material, sprinkling with alcohol and rolling in a newspaper, commencing with the paper and crape together, so that the paper may be between every portion of the material. Allow it to remain so until dry.

Good housekeepers are frequently annoyed by oil marks on papered walls against which careless or thoughtless persons have laid their heads. These unsightly spots may be removed by making a paste of cold water and pipe clay or fuller's earth, and laying it on the surface without rubbing it on, else the pattern of the paper will then likely be injured. Leave the paste on all night. In the morning it can be brushed off and the spot will have disappeared, but a renewal of the operation may be necessary if the oil mark is old.—Philadelphia Press.

Funeral Etiquette From a Medical Standpoint.

In case of death from a contagious disorder, public funerals are very properly forbidden by health authorities, although occasionally a "wake" is surreptitiously held, with its unfortunate but natural results; of this, however, we need not speak, as the wisdom of thus limiting infection is acquiesced in generally by intelligent people, and the law is usually obeyed. There are some minor infractions of the laws of health that should be mentioned, which physicians have repeatedly called attention to, but the higher laws of fashion and custom appear to exert a preponderating influence. For instance, there are very few days in the year when delicate women can ride long distances in a close carriage, and then, reaching the cemetery, stand upon the damp, cold sod for a greater or less time during the final ceremonies at the grave without physical injury to themselves.

A custom also to which especial attention should be directed, in order to have it changed, is that of men standing bare-headed in the open air, apparently indifferent to the burning sun of July or the cold winds of March, without regard to the season or the weather. Taking into consideration the associated conditions, the necessarily depressing influence upon the emotions of the sad duty which at the time is pre-eminent in the mind, the physical condition resulting from sitting in a cramped position during a tedious ride in a carriage and the unaccustomed exposure to the weather, it is not surprising that cases of illness result from the removal of the head covering, particularly in elderly people with an enfeebled circulation. On a hot day there is danger of producing, if not actual sunstroke, at least a congestion of the membranes of the brain, which causes persistent and violent headaches, and to these ministers and those officiating are particularly liable.

Whether the day be hot or cold, wet or only windy, let the services be held at a place where the health of the attendant need not be imperiled; let delicate and weakly persons be restrained from riding to the cemetery and from standing on the damp ground; and especially let men obey common sense rather than custom, and keep on their hats when they risk a sickness by their removal.—Medical Times.

A Literary Fraud.

I came across a literary woman whose sin of plagiarism was committed through no desire for fame, but was merely incidental to a more tangible form of swindling, writes a New York correspondent to the Albany Journal. She advertised that, in order to educate her two boys, she wished a little help in publishing a volume of original poems. The work was open to the inspection of any person who desired to look at it, and she artfully intimated that she, too, was an object of admiring contemplation. Wondering if there was anything new in her trickery, I went to learn. She was handsome, a glib liar as to remarkable ancestry, and the height of her aim was $50. I suppose she varies it according to her judgment of the caller's pocketbook. But the curious point was that she showed a manuscript volume of poetry, made up of pieces so familiar in current popularity that "The Beautiful Snow," somewhat transposed and broken up, but all there, was included in her claims. "I am a daughter of Bret Harte and——, I don't mind telling you, if you can keep a secret," and she coolly named an unmarried lady well known as an authoress, "and rhyming is to me instinctive." Her surroundings indicated that fool-fish do get caught in so wide-meshed a net as that.

Melville Millar

one is under the impression that Saint-Phar is the prospective son-in-law. I hear her say to the cousin from the country:

"I supposed he was a younger man; they told me he was good-looking, but he seems to me very plain. However, if Cecile is satisfied, that is all that is necessary."

"You are mistaken," replies the lady with the pinched lips; "it is the one next to Cecile. Don't you think it a little improper for them to be sitting side by side? Her mother forgets that an expected marriage does not always take place."

"Yes! yes! you are right," replies the deaf aunt, trying to make believe she has understood. "Yes, I prefer rice, because I have lost my teeth."

The cousin turns to her neighbor on the right, M. Miraul's brother.

"Are you not of my opinion, Monsieur?"

"No, Madame. These two young people are together because Anastasie, who was to separate them, has not come, and, for my part, I can see no harm in it whether the marriage takes place or not."

The wife of the provincial notary casts a severe glance at me. Evidently she does not like me, but I return the compliment. Possibly she had hoped to marry Cecile to that brilliant son of hers.

At last we come to the dessert. I feel more at ease. In a quarter of an hour more Saint-Phar will leave as he said.

The amount that he has consumed is astounding, and now he is becoming very loquacious. Everyone is talking with his neighbor. My Cecile is so near me that her arm touches mine. How happy I should be if I were not so preoccupied—but my evening has been spoiled.

My attention is attracted by the voice of the Commander replying to Saint-Phar:

"But, sacre bleu! Monsieur, I tell you I have none, my feet were shot through by a bullet."

"But I tell you that you have," replied the little man vehemently. "I have discovered them on people who would not believe they had them. Why, Monsieur, sometimes when amputation had been talked of, I have come with my case of instruments, performed an operation, removed the cause of the trouble, and shown it to the astonished multitude, who have hailed me as the great, the skillful, the incomparable Saint-Phar. Had I wished, I might have been decorated with countless orders, for I have held in my hands hundreds of feet belonging to the crowned heads of Europe. But I prefer my independence. Keep your honors and your ribbons, and know that in my eyes all feet are equal. Oh! but I tell you that you have them, the deaf lady has them, and so has every one in this distinguished company around me. So I beg that you, who have treated me so kindly, will permit me to propose a toast." Saint-Phar rises, cries "silence," wipes his eyes, and, with much emotion, says:

"'SAINT PHAR,
CHIROPODIST,
PLACE DE LA BOURSE.'"

I long for the earth to open and swallow me up. All eyes are turned upon me.

"He is a friend of yours?" says the wife of the notary, in a sharp voice.

I can keep the secret no longer; there is no way out of it but tell the whole story, and this I do in all its details. Everyone laughs and concludes that Saint-Phar is not so bad a fellow after all. They all take his address, thinking it many be a good idea to know where to find a chiropodist. I feel much relieved after the confession is over, and were it not for Madame Miraul's melancholy expression, should be perfectly happy.

After dinner several people arrive, and among them Cousin Anastasie, whom Madame Miraul overwhelms with reproaches.

Anastasie throws the whole blame upon her son Ignace, and insists that she herself is at fault only in this, that she tried to humor Madame Miraul's superstition.

Then she goes through a budget of stories to show that twenty times in her life she has sat down to dinner where there were thirteen at table and that she is not dead yet. After this conclusive argument she comes up to me:

"Monsieur, I am delighted to welcome you into our family. In marrying Cecile you gain the grand prize; she is an angel, and will make an adorable wife."

As I am wholly of the same opinion, I squeeze the hand which she affectionately extends to me, and the evening closes without other incident.

The next day I present myself at a quarter after 7, and find Cecile and Aunt Charlotte working upon tapestry, M. Miraul reading the paper, and his wife buried in a great arm chair. When she sees me, she says:

"Oh! my poor child, I almost died last night!"

"What is the matter, my dear mother," I says, kneeling before her; "you are pale?"

"I might well be so for much less a reason. Thirteen at a table! Oh, my poor friend, death is hovering over us!"

"Yes, that is true; it is always hovering over us, and we should let it hover, without worrying about the morrow, which does not belong to us. Let us enjoy the present, and not sadden it by gloomy thoughts. We lack only your kind smile to make us happy."

We all press around and pet her, while she looks at us with drooping eyes.

"My dear children," she says to us, "I feel very deeply about this matter; be kind to me; you were to be married on the 2d of November; put off the wedding until the 2d of January. Let fate take the one of us whom it has marked for its own."

"Do you think, my dear mother, of delaying our marriage on account of a baseless superstition?"

"I only ask of you two months' delay, and two months will pass so quickly! If, during that time, no one of us shall die, you will find me much more hopeful; but at the present moment the idea is fixed in my mind, and I assure you that you will do me great harm if you do not yield to my entreaty"—whereupon she burst into tears.

My Cecile weeps because she sees her mother weeping, the father says nothing, and Aunt Charlotte whispers to me:

"Yield for the moment. Eulalie is very nervous; everything can be arranged later."

Look, dear mother, dry you eyes, I will do just as you wish. Does that not prove how much I love you? For it is two months of happiness that you are taking away from me. It is a cruel punishment, but I will not complain."

I am a well-disposed man, but at last I reach the point of wishing that the notary's wife would die, for that would at least bring matters to an end. Madame Miraul would recover her peace of mind, and would permit me to be happy. But the notary's wife does not [illegible] of the other members of the family.

One evening Madame Miraul put the finishing stroke upon my distress by propounding this idea:

"I am not exactly sure that the bad luck which comes from the number thirteen does not extend through the twelve following months. It was the 1st of October when that unlucky dinner took place, and the spell may last to the 1st of October of next year."

As I listen to her my blood grows cold, and Cecile becomes ghastly pale. This was all that was lacking. My mother-in-law has beyond doubt found a new hobby, and she is capable of riding it until the 1st of next October.

After I have reached my own apartments, I throw my furniture about, kick over my inoffensive chairs, and give myself up to pounding my pillow, which receives my blows with such patient good nature, that at last I am quite disarmed, hide my head in its feathers, and sob like a child. This does me good. I feel relieved, and finally fall asleep. At an early hour I rise, dress in haste, and rush to the house of my friend X——, the manager and editor-in-chief of the newspaper L——. I make my way in, find him in bed, wake him, and force him to listen to me. A half hour later I leave with a beaming face, for we have formed a plan which will set everything right.

The next evening I reach the Miraul mansion with a light heart; my future father-in-law is reading the paper, and the ladies are sewing. I pay my respects to everyone, Bijou included, and take a seat.

"Well, father, what is the news in the paper?"

"Oh! mon Dieu! nothing in particular," replies M. Miraul; "politics, all politics! nothing else."

"And in the miscellaneous items?"

"I never read them."

"You make a mistake; they are the most interesting part of the paper. Permit me to read them to the ladies. It will rest your eyes, which must be as tired as you yourself are bored by all those political articles."

"Oh, yes," cries Cecile, "read to us while we are sewing, Monsieur Adrien; that will be lovely."

I take the paper, and am ready to begin, when Madame Miraul complains of being thirsty.

What luck! I rush out of the room, taking with me the paper, which I thrust into the wood-box as I pass. I asked the maid, who appears in answer to my call, to bring me a glass of sugar and water for her mistress. While she is gone, I take out of my pocket another paper exactly like the one I have just put out of sight, except that, thanks to my friend, the journalist, it has been especially prepared for my use. Then I return to the parlor.

I begin reading the miscellaneous items. They think I read well, and urge me to continue. I scan the paper for something interesting. Suddenly I exclaim:

"Oh! it cannot be possible! Mon Dieu! But yet, it must be true."

"What is it? What is it?" they all ask in succession.

"Listen."

"Yesterday there was buried a man of marked originality, a chiropodist named Saint-Phar, who was exceedingly skillful in his profession. He died while attempting to practice his art immediately after a too hearty dinner. He was seized with apoplexy at the house of his patient, M. de G., who received such a shock that the physician, called for the unfortunate Saint-Phar who was already dead, was obliged to resort to the most energetic measures to prevent M. de G. from going to join the chiropodist."

Madame Miraul rises, snatches the paper from my hands, and reads the article and cries:

"Did I not tell you that the number, thirteen is always fatal? May God send peace to the soul of that man. How happy I am to be free from my nightmare. Oh! my children, how good is God."

"Then, dear mother, can we set an earlier day for our marriage?"

"Yes, my dears, the dreadful debt is

We all embrace earth other so that I have an opportunity of embracing Cecile—but they owe me that reparation. At 10 o'clock I take my leave, muttering imprecations on superstition and its devotees.

A month rolls away, and Madame Miraul is still inflexible in her decree. I dine at the house twice a week, and on Sundays arrive at 11 in the morning and stay till evening. All this is good, too good; for the more I see Cecile the more I love her, and the more I suffer from my mother-in-law's persistency paid, and I am eager to see you happy."

Three weeks later Cecile and I were married.

Ten months have passed of cloudless happiness. To-day is the 24 of October, and my Cecile has just presented me with a son and heir. The mother and child are both doing well. Aunt Charlotte and my mother-in-law are rushing about the house, all the relatives are arriving, one after another, with congratulations and good wishes. In the midst of our happiness and excitement I hear a discussion among the servants, and a voice saying in the most provincial accent:

"I tell you I will come in; let me pass—I am a friend of your master—"

The parlor door opens. Saint-Phar, whom I have so securely buried—Saint-Phar, in flesh and blood—bursts in, exclaiming:

"Ah, my friend, you must have thought me dead, for it is just a year since I had the honor of dining with the estimable family around me. I was summoned to Russia by a great personage who has made me his attendant chiropodist, and has heaped upon me extraordinary honors. All the gifts of fortune have come to me; I am almost rich. I obtained a fortnight's leave of absence, arrived here this morning and have hastened to see your friend M. de Bremond. He told of your happiness and I have come to bring you my congratulations, and to assure you that you did not entertain an ungrateful guest, but one whose heart and stomach both hold you in remembrance. How glad I am to see you all together just a year from that day! To-day we are no longer thirteen. Thanks to Monsieur, we are fourteen, and possibly next year we shall be fifteen. This little fellow needs a sister."

He opens his mouth wide and bursts out laughing.

Madame Miraul looks at me. I blush and drop my head.

"You deceived me!" she says.

"Yes, my dear mother; do you regret it? That fixed idea would have killed you. My Cecile would have died, and I should not have survived her. But now, instead of funerals, we are all reunited for a baptism, not one of us is missing from the number, and it is the 2d of October. You see, my dear mother, that it is a childish superstition, and one to which we ought not to yield. Forgive my stratagem, and be persuaded that the stories about the number thirteen and spilled salt are only nursery tales. And now kiss your grandson, and believe no more in bad luck [illegible] and see us all remember that the best way to show our gratitude to heaven for the happy days it grants us is to enjoy them with all our hearts."

THE END.

Oddity in Designs.

The demand for bric-a-brac and novelties in household decoration apparently does not abate, and there is such a pressure for novelties that designers in all parts of the world from Boston to Yokohama are kept busy pushing their inventiveness to the last degree to turn out new combinations. Every manufacturer who caters to this taste in any way keeps a designer, whose ears are burdened with the demand for something new. An old shoe or an old hat give an idea for a bon-bon case. Every animal in the menagerie is employed by various artisans. Botany, as well as zoology, is ransacked for designs, and all the combinations apparently possible are made. Nevertheless, there seems to be no limit to the fertility of the designers. In referring to this subject a bric-a-brac dealer, with an idle quarter of an hour on his hands, conducted a reporter through his collection, and as he went along his counters he said:

"There is a lamp that has the form of a white owl, from whose head rises the stem of an immense rose with closely folded leaves, which entirely conceal the globe. There is a stork in flight, with its wings spread out and its legs extended. It is ornamented, and is to be suspended from the chandelier by invisible threads. There is a candlestick with a gold grape leaf for its base, and with a light receiver of crystal painted in gold. There is a workbasket in the form of a skiff, and another, with a moss-covered top full of artificial plants, is in the shape of a flower pot. There is a big elephant of porcelain, with an opening in its back for begonias, and there is a porcelain vase representing a tree trunk overgrown with climbing plants. There is a mirror to be bordered with cut flowers, and to represent a miniature lake in the center of a dinner table. That crystal ball mounted upon a spiral pedestal is for a center-table ornament to catch and reflect the light. That glass screen has, you observe, pond lilies painted upon it so that they seem to be floating in water. The curiously-twisted horns in that smoking set come from Eagle Pass, Tex., and are lambs' horns. The other horns are from the heads of buffaloes. They are mounted in Paris and sent back here. That dagger is a paper-cutter, and its sheath forms a thermometer. That cat is an inkstand. The head in a flaring bonnet is the same. Lift the face, and there is the ink-well. That gold-numbered ship, with silver sails and a cargo incased in Austrian glass, is a liquor set. Here is a baby-carriage that represents a slipper lined with plush, and here is another shaped like a canoe. That tree of gold, with a nest for eggs, is for next Easter. This paper-weight contains a Geneva timepiece, and this one has a clock on one side, a barometer on the other, a thermometer between, and a geographical globe above. That stork, raising itself within a lotus thicket to seize a frog, supports a thermometer, and that setter dog, with a bird in his mouth, holds up a barometer. This gilded key, with a pair of brasen dragons in the ring, is a common and popular fancy for a thermometer now. Those three Turkish pipes form a newspaper rack. Here are designs for open fireplaces, for, after all, there is no bric-a-brac to compare with a bright open fire. And so the variety increases. There is no end to the designs. The designers are chiefly Europeans, who are worked at high pressure all the time."—New York Sun.

A Strange Disease in Siberia.

A strange disease is met with in Siberia, and is known to the Russians by the name of Miryachit. The person affected seems compelled to imitate anything he hears or sees, and an interesting account is given of a steward who was reduced to a perfect state of misery by his inability to avoid imitating everything he heard and saw. One day the captain of the steamer, running up to him, suddenly clapping his hands at the same time, accidentally slipped, and fell hard on the deck, without having been touched, the steward instantly clapped his hands and shouted; then, in helpless imitation, he too fell as hard, and almost precisely in the same manner and position as the captain. This disease has been meet with in Java, where it is known as lata. In the case of a female servant who had the same irresistible tendency to imitate her mistress, the latter, one day at dessert, wishing to exhibit this peculiarity, and catching the woman's eye, suddenly reached across the table, and seizing a large French plum, made pretense to swallow it whole. The woman rushed at the dish and put a plum in her mouth, and after severe choking and semi-asphyxia, succeeded in swallowing it; but her mistress never tried the experiment again.—London Medical Record.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Mechanics' Institute.

A meeting of the class committee of the Peterborough Mechanics' Institute, will be held in the rooms of the Institute, on Tuesday evening, the 27th Oct., at 7:30 o'clock.

"A Masonic Mystery."

A "Masonic Mystery," with all that the title involves, when treated by an eloquent platform orator like Dr. Wild, is the subject of this reverend gentleman's address in Bradburn's Opera House on Wednesday evening, Oct. 28th.

"Latest Advices."

A lecture will be delivered in the Charlotte Street Methodist Church, on Monday evening, by the Rev. Chancellor Nelles, on "Latest Advices." The chair will be taken at eight o'clock by James Stevenson, Esq. There will be no admission fee, but a silver collection will be taken on behalf of the Library Fund of Victoria University.

Annual Educational Services.

GEORGE ST. CHURCH.—11 a. m., Rev. E. H. Dewart, D. D., Editor of the Christian Guardian. 7 p. m., Rev. S. S. Nelles, D.D., LL. D., Chancellor of Victoria University.

CHARLOTTE ST. CHURCH.—11 a. m., Rev. Dr. Nelles. 7 p.m., Rev. Dr. Dewart.

Collections in both churches on behalf of the educational fund.

Market Items.

The Market Place presented quite a lively appearance this morning, the farmers being in in large numbers, and the townspeople, intent on buying, drawn out by the fine weather, numerous. The following prices ruled:—Butter, 21c.; eggs, 12c.; chickens, per pair, 45c.; geese, 60c.; turkeys, 60c.; potatoes were selling from 50c. per bag; apples, 60c. and upwards. There was a large number of fowls offered for sale, and produce of all kinds was plentiful.

Prof. Dorenwend at Grand Central Hotel Peterborough.

Baldness, gray hair, thin hair, dandruff, falling of the hair, &c., can all be remedied by the use of Dr. C. Dorenwend's Great German "Hair Magic," the most wonderful preparation for effectually restoring color and vitality of the hair, preventing falling, producing a heavy growth, making hair grow on bald spots, &c., ever discovered. It is unfailing in its results, as the many testimonials received daily by the sole owner and manufacturer for America, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, can testify. The Professor will be at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26, 27 and 28, and every one who wishes to try a bottle can procure it from him. The price is $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Call on him and procure a bottle.

It was the Parrot.

She would buy a parrot. Her husband told her not to, but she was a black-eyed brunette, and black-eyed brunettes always have their own way. If you don't believe that, just ask any married man with a black-eyed wife if it is not a fact. Anyway, she bought the parrot, which was hung up in the dining room. She (the black-eyed lady, not the parrot) wanted a rocking chair, but Hubby said no; times were too hard. Boots and beef were all he could afford. And the family were always on the increase. He called attention to the fact that the twins out in the backyard were barefoot. But she would have her own way. She taught the parrot to say: "Poly wants a rocking chair!" And every time he came home to dinner, and after tea, when he had taken off his slippers and settled down comfortably to read THE EXAMINER, the show would begin, and that bird would screech, "Buy me a rocking chair!" until the unfortunate husband was wild. At last he could stand it no longer, and said to his wife, "My love, if you will get rid of that dod-gasted fool of a parrot you may go down to Dan. Belleghem's and buy all the rocking chairs you want, he's got the biggest and cheapest lot of furniture in town." Poor Polly's career was cut short, and Belleghem made a sale the same evening.

A Boom in Vaccination.

Those who have hitherto been tardy in getting vaccinated are now flocking to the medical men in large numbers, and there is quite a boom in vaccine points. One practioner operated upon 150 persons yesterday afternoon and evening, and empty cuntaineves will soon become a common sight.

A Strong Team.

Rev. E. H. Dewart, D.D., editor of the Christian Guardian, and Rev. S. S. Nelles, D.D., LL.D., chancellor, of Victoria university, will preach at the annual educational services in Charlotte street and George street Methodist churches to-morrow, as per notice in another column. Collections will be taken up in aid of the educational fund.

New Hose Couplings.

At a meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee held yesterday afternoon, it was decided to recommend the purchase of new couplings for 1,450 feet of hose. They will be what is known as the Toronto thread, or four threads to the inch, instead of seven, like those at present used. Nipples and caps for this change is made the rubber hose will be available for use.

Police Court.

Patrick Cavanagh, who was yesterday fined $2 for drunkenness, bobbed up serenely again this morning, and was awarded a fine of $5 or fifteen days in gaol. The funds being exhausted he was sent to assist in putting up the new steps in Court House Park.

Jake Roberts was charged with assaulting a young girl named Margaret Brown. The charge was sustained, and having frequently offended before, he was sent to gaol for one month.

In order to make room for Xmas stock, now coming in, Sailsbury Bros. are offering bargains—20 to 30 per cent discount.

A Shiner Wants to Shoot a Shoeny.

Thomas King, a bootblack, described by the Toronto Globe as a "bright looking youth," was charged at a Toronto Police Court yesterday with pointing a revolver at a York street Jew clothier, who refused to refund the price of a pair of misfit pants. He informed the magistrate that his business was "shinnin," which accounts for the bright looks described by the Globe, and that to the best of his belief he was born at Peterboro'. Now, although all natives of this town are bound to "shine," and are invariably "bright looking" they never carry revolvers, so the bright youth must be regarded as a shining liar, who with malice aforethought was endeavouring to bring disgrace on this respectable burgh; and Peterborough patriots will rejoice to learn that he was fined $5 and his weapon confiscated.

We Would Like to Know.

If any of the town councillors attended the Dufferin Literary Club debate last evening.

And if they got any pointers on exemption.

What Dr. Dewart and Dr. Nelles willl say about University Federation to-morrow.

What they are Saying.

Its an ill wind that blows nobody good.—The Doctors.

Yes, we all see the "point" at times like this.—The candidates for vaccination.

Who says we're no use now?—The Board of Health.

I told you what would happen if you didn't vaccinate those G. T. R. cars.—Tommy Beavis.

We are going to put the new couplings on the fire hose.—The Fire, Water and Light Committee.

We've settled the exemption question.—The Dufferin Literary Club.

Personal.

Mr. John P. Sutton, of Quebec, is at present in town in the interests of the Parnell Parliamentary fund, making arrangements for securing additions thereto. It is understood the fund is to be used to assist the Irish people in the coming Parliamentary struggle to send home rule representatives to Parliament. Mr. Sutton reports that he has met with considerable success in Ottawa and other places.

Mr. J. M. Kennedy, formerly of the Hamilton Tribune, and who has accepted the business management of the Whitby Chronicle, was in town yesterday. Under Mr. Kennedy's management this staunch Liberal journal may be expected not only to hold its own but to make marked advancement.

He Had Felt it Himself.

Said one business man to another the other day:

"Business is already looking up. I look for a big boom if things keep up this rising tendency."

"Yes," said the other; "I've noticed this rising tendency in things. In fact I felt elevated myself last week."

And then they gazed upon each other's rubicund countenances and smiled, the bad things.

What is Truth?

Dr. Dewart's Educational Sermon, Delivered in Charlotte-street Church.

The annual educational services of the George-street and Charlotte-street Methodist churches were held yesterday, Rev. Dr. Dewart, editor of the Christian Guardian, and Rev. Dr. Nelles, of Victoria College, Cobourg, being the preachers. Dr. Dewart occupied the George-street pulpit in the morning, and Charlotte-street in the evening. At the latter service he chose as his text John xviii., and part of the 38th verse:—"Pilate saith unto him, what is truth?"

This question, he said, was one that since Pilate's time had been frequently asked, not only in times of zealous inquiry and seeking after light, but even in the darker days, when the gloom and obscurity of ignorance and superstition enveloped the universe, this inquiry—"What is truth?"—throbbed and burned like a smouldering fire in the heart of men.

THE TRUTH OF SCIENCE.

This inquiry was apparent in the literature of the past, which was the record of the thoughts of the great minds of the world, and in our own day the answer to Pilate's question was being sought with undiminished interest. Historians, geologists, scientists of all kinds were tracing in the dim records of the past for a solution of the question. But the progress of discovery was comparatively slow, and many problems were left still unsolved in these fields of inquiry. In science many theories once accepted as sound and true were now rejected and cast aside for more acceptable ideas, and the same was true of all departments of thought; and in the higher regions of thought the darkness deepened and men were found groping in darkness over the stormy sea, with no guiding star to direct them to a haven of safety, but God.

There could be no answer to this question till we turned from the shades of earth to the golden stars of heaven, from the vague speculations of our own brains to that Divine revelation in which God made clear his will and purpose concerning us.

This darkness could only be dispersed, this hungering after truth satisfied, the weary burden of ignorance removed only by the strong hand of the abiding God.

SCIENCE AND CHRISTIANITY.

It has often been charged that the work of the church had burdened rather than assisted in progress, and was opposed to the progress of thought and acquisition of knowledge. The apparent collision between what was called religion and science had not really been between religion and science, but between religion and false theories in science or between false suppositions of religion and true ideas in science. The greatest discoveries in science had been made by men who were firm believers in revealed truth. Roger Bacon was a Christian, so was Copernicus, and such names as those of Isaac Newton, David Brewster, Sir Humphrey Davy, Michael Faraday, Lord Bacon and Keppler, might be quoted as men of devoted and reverential faith. There was no truth in the idea that religion and christianity were antagonistic to knowledge.

There were various kinds of truth, but the truth spoken of by the Saviour had reference to the revelation of God as part of his will concerning us, and his purpose of mercy to our fallen race. A small-minded and mean man could not understand the actions of a generous and liberal-minded one, and in the same way much less could the soul-darkened by sin rise to a just and true conception of the holy God. It was delightful to turn from man's ideas to God's Holy Book, where the power of His wisdom and goodness showed forth, revealing not only our guilt and darkness, but the remedy; the truth regarding our destiny and the life immortal were brought to light. Its doctrines were true, and its threatenings would be fulfilled by a faithful and covenant-keeping God. They had been tried by tens of thousands who had accepted of Christ, and this fact that thousands had accepted God's word and Divine truths, and proved the truth of them by their own experience, was one of the strongest evidences of the truth of Christianity.

The spiritual nature was the highest nature, though it was customary to dwell on the intellectual powers of man as evidences of his high position. It was a grand thing this intellectual power, but in things Divine were to be found the highest and most dignified part of our nature; in having a nature like God's nature, a capacity for loving and trusting Him and receiving and becoming the temple of His Holy Spirit.

CONCEPTIONS OF LIFE AND CHARACTER.

The conceptions we held of these things would determine our views of education, and if we held a low idea of moral character, our ideas of education would correspond; but if we thought of man in the image of God, and with a high capacity for usefulness, then we would have an idea of the complete education of the intellectual powers in harmony with our high estimate of the importance and significance of life. This was where many people failed; their ideas of life were too limited, and their idea of education corresponded with them. Education should quicken our moral senses, our belief in God, our knowledge of right and wrong; not sharpening the intellect in mere mental problems, but qualifying us for the immortality to come.

It was impossible to worship God without some just conception of His grandeur, or to trust Christ without understanding the greatness of His character. The sun rising in the morning might tip the hill tops with golden light, but down in the valleys was a darkness that could not be dispelled till the sun rose in the heavens and shone down into them. And in the same way the truth must shine down into the dark places of the human heart before the fruits of holiness would appear.

We must not rest content in theoretical knowledge; there was a possibility of an apprehension of the facts of Christianity without any personal experience of them in daily life. One might know of the incarnation of Christ, His life and death, and yet not know of him as their own personal Saviour. We must be born again, mere head knowledge about these great truths would only darken our contemplation if we were without a personal knowledge of their transforming power.

Freedom had always a charm for the human heart, and the names of men who had struggled for it, and the fields on which its battles had been fought appealed strongly to our sympathies. But there was a slavery worse than that of the body, the quenching the immortal spirit, and the enslavement of God-given powers. Spiritual deliverance was a grander and a holier thing than deliverance from physical slavery. No matter how far a man had wandered into some far country, or how deeply the iron of spiritual slavery had entered into his soul, or how heavy his burden of dark despair, his fetters could be snapped by the truth of the Gospel, and he could be lifted into the light of liberty and the salvation of God, and rejoice in the hope of eternal life.

THE WORK OF EDUCATION.

The work of education was one in which people were slower to take an active interest than in home or church work. There was a feeling sometimes that the colleges should be sustained by the rich, but this was a mistake. There should be institutions of learning with open doors where instruction could be imparted to young men who had brains and no money. A rich man could educate his son anyhow, and therefore it was especially in the interests of the poor young man with courage and ability, but no money that these seminaries should be opened; it was a fallacious idea that colleges were for the rich. That country which best educated its people would always be foremost in the race of nations, and the same was true of the church.

Prof. Dorenwend is Coming.

It will be seen in another column that the great hair goods artist, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, will be in Peterborough at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 26th, 27th and 28th. He will have with with him a large stock of his excellent goods, such as Langtry, Parisian and Pompadour bangs, water waves, switches, ladies' wigs, gents' wigs and Toupees, &c. All who are in need of something neat, becoming and stylish in this line, should not fail to visit him and see his magnificent stock. It is a well-known fact that he is the leading hair goods manufacturer of Canada, and spares no labor and expense in being up to the times, and giving satisfaction to his customers and patrons. Remember he will be here for three days only at the Grand Central hotel, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26th, 27th and 28th.

Fenelon Falls.

Last Sunday a farmer of this vicinity drove into the village on business thoughts intent, and was mightily astonished to find all the stores shut up. He had forgotten what day it was, and his mistake is, of course, being laughed at by the whole community. We suppose he is one of the men who "don't take no papers;" at any rate, he does not take the—Gazette.

All the men employed on the Government works in this village have left except three or four who are tidying up the banks of the locks, but by Saturday evening the last stroke of work with which the contractors are concerned will have been done. We are glad to observe that as a prevention against accidents strong barriers of raised timber have been erected on each side of the locks, commencing at the bridge, and that a neat iron railing has been put along the side and at the east end of the raceway; but we cannot help thinking that the barrier west of the bridge and on the south side of the locks ought to have been extended 15 or 20 feet farther, as it does not cross a line drawn from the centre of the iron bridge over the river to the upper lock.—Gazette.

Hastings.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The confirmation service held in St. Mary's church, on Sunday morning, was largely attended, many friends from the other churches being present. The service was conducted by Bishop Jamot, of Peterborough. He was assisted by Rev. Father Bryan, of the same place, and Rev. Father Quirk, pastor of the church. The congregation of the R. C. church at Norwood, having joined for the confirmatory service with the congregation here, the number confirmed amounted to something over a hundred. Bishop Jamot having to officiate at Norwood as well, and as the service commenced at half-past twelve, he was unable to remain during the whole of the service, it was therefore concluded by the Rev. Father Bryan.

The Rev. D. A. Thompson, pastor of the Presbyterian church, preached a very interesting sermon to the S. S. scholars on Sunday evening. The first part of his sermon was taken from II. Kings, v., 24, and the latter part from John vi., 9. His remarks made, and comparisons drawn from both texts, were so clearly laid before the children that even the smallest child could not fail to have its attention fixed on the subject, and take an interest in what was being said.

The tea and lecture, to be given under the auspices of the Methodist church, to aid in procuring more furniture for the parsonage, hopes for a liberal patronage from the community at large.

Miss Morton left by the afternoon train, on Monday, for the village of Trenton, where she intends remaining for some time. The younglady will be considerably missed in the sabbath school and other places, as she was a faithful and efficient worker at all places of entertainment. We wish her every success in her new sphere of labor, and feel satisfied she will be as willing a worker there as here.

During the past few weeks, many of the young people of our village have been slain, as it were, on the Hymeneal Altar. And we understood from the "Hastings Star" some others were to follow in a day or two. So far as we have seen or heard, nothing of such being the case. It may be that the Star was only a little too premature, or perhaps it has the young couple in prospects, and would like to see them comfortably settled before old weather sets in.

The first meeting of the band took place in the Council Chamber Monday evening, when the following officers were elected:—Mr. A. Wilson, jr., bandmaster; Mr. P. Howard, secretary; Mr. A. Wilson, jr., treasurer; Messrs. T. Learmoth, T. Howard and J. B. Ward, committee. The Council has generously given the use of the Council Chamber free, with the exception of the caretaker's fee. The band will meet for practice every Monday and Thursday evenings.

Mrs. Dr. Fife, of Peterborough, a former resident of this place, has been visiting friends here during the past week.

FORESTERS.

The election of officers to represent Court Lakefield, No. 43, C. O. F., for the ensuing six months, was held in the court room on Thursday evening, when there was a good attendance of members present. The following are the officers elected:

Bro. John C. Balsdon	C. R.
" Jas. Campbell	V. C. R.
" C. J. Burgiss	Chap.
" Dr. Bell	F. Sec'ty.
" David Arnott	R. Sec'ty.
" Wm. M. Graham	Treas.
" John Balsdon	S. W.
" Thos. Wallace	J. W.
" Robert McWilliams	S. B.
" John Northcott	J. B.
" Alex. Bell, M. D.	Court Physician.

Brothers John Clarin and W. McDonald auditors.

SPORTING.

Messrs. R. C. Strickland, Major Leigh, Toronto, J. P. Strickland, A. W. Wright and others are spending ten days up in camp at Stony Lake, after deer, ducks, etc.

GRIST MILL.

Messrs. Stricklands' new grist mill is making good progress; the frame work is up and a day or two more will see it closed in and work will be pushed ahead to have it in operation at the earliest date possible.

A MISTAKE.

A well known sportsman of this village, learned in law, while out on Clear Lake the other morning, noticed two geese quietly resting on a rock. As they were some distance from any house, and as the fog was thick, he concluded they were from the north, and in a moment had one secured, only to discover they were natives. The lady owner was quite indignant, although our hero was profuse in his regrets at the mistake and offered twice the value of the bird to the wrathy dame, who, however, declined any compensation.

NEW VILLAGE HALL.

The Village Council have secured the building on Mill Reserve No. 1, lately used by Messrs. Strickland as an office, for village purposes, and it is now being put in a condition to meet their requirements. Workmen are also engaged in digging the foundation for a lock-up or black hole, to accommodate some of the fast youths of the village and neighbourhood, who want a little cooling off.

CHANGE OF BUSINESS.

Chapin Bros. have dissolved partnership and have sold out their planing mill and furniture factory to Mr. Jonathan Griffin, who has taken possession and will run the business in future.

SCHOOL BOARD.

A special meeting of the Lakefield School Board was held in the council chamber on Tuesday, the 20th, inst. Present, the chairman, Messrs. Abbot, Deach, Wallace and Gordon.

A communication was received from the head master, enclosing monthly report. Total number on roll 237; average attendance 175.

On motion of Mr. Gordon, seconded by Mr. R. Q. Deach, the following accounts were paid:

John Cooper, cartage	$ 3 00
Abel Hendren, repairs	10 73
George Nicholls, repairs	1 25
Wright & Payton, pump	9 45
R. & G. Strickland, lumber	1 00

On motion of Mr. T. Gordon, seconded by Mr. W. J. Wallace, the Board requests the council to appoint and hold the annual school election on the same day as that on which the municipal elections are held, according to the statute of 1885.

On motion of Mr. R. Q. Deach, seconded by Mr. Wm. Abbot, an election for school trustees to take place on Friday, the 20th inst., at the Council Chamber, to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Armour's removal from the village, was resolved upon, and that Mr. W. J. Wallace appointed returning officer.

COBOURG'S CORNERED CONDITION.

We sympathise deeply with Cobourg in the condition in which she finds herself placed. The Ontario Government is pushing the town for the payment of an indebtedness of some $70,000. In the emergency a special meeting of the council was called to consider the course of action proper in the crisis. Some members were in favor of disputing the debt, and others in favor of meeting the liability in a manly manner. The following references to the matter, by the Cobourg World, show what an unfortunate position the town of Cobourg finds itself in :

"A reference to our new advertisements, and to our report of council proceedings, will reveal the fact that a crisis is impending in our municipal affairs. Hon. A. M. Ross answers the mayor's last petition for further respite in the matter of our municipal loan fund indebtedness, by announcing to the world of finance that on the 14th day of November next, sealed tenders will be received for the purchase of debentures of the town of Cobourg, representing a cash value of £8,800 stg., maturing on August 31st, 1893, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. from June 31st, 1874, and constituting a first charge upon the municipality. There is a laconicism about this announcement which is refreshing, and yet we receive it with all the terror of a criminal who hears the workmen erecting his scaffold. The evil day—so long postponed—is upon us. Nemesis is upon our trail.

It is to be regretted that the government have deemed it in the best interests of the Province to come down upon us in this decidedly cyclopean fashion. Yet it cannot be denied that this debt was orginally incurred at the instance of the representatives of the town for the construction of gravel roads and other public works which were considered of local advantage. The sum borrowed by Cobourg was something like $500,000. When Hon. Oliver Mowat came into office, he found that Cobourg in common with a large number of municipalities throughout the Province had paid little or nothing into the government treasury, where the money was due. Recognizing the necessity of giving these corporations some measure of relief, he promptly framed a scheme, which was adopted by the Legislature in an act of Parliament, and which provided for a liberal and equitable settlement of the Municipal Loan Fund Debt; the liability of Cobourg on that charge was reduced from $500,000 to $69,580. Thanks to the foolish and fraudulent intent of those who were presiding over our municipal destinies at that time, in concealing the position of affairs by striking a rate under what was actually required,—Cobourg did not receive that measure of relief to which she was entitled under the Act of 1873. But she has only her fatuous self to blame for that. She could not expect the government to let her know the details of the scheme before it passed into law.

We were asked not to publish the proceedings of Council this week. But after due consideration, we have decided to admit our citizens to the deliberations of the civic fathers. As we see it, nothing can be gained by a suppression of the facts. Cobourg has got a tremendous duty to tackle. This enormous legacy of debt, left us by an improvident ancestry, must and shall be wiped out. Let us set about it, heroically, patriotically, and unitedly."

The interests of the town would be much better served by adopting and acting upon the advice of the World. Deputations may come, and deputations may go, but interest goes on forever—until it is stopped by payment of the principal. The debt must be paid, and the time wasted in begging for more time, would be much more profitably employed in devising some scheme for lifting the incubus of debt that is squeezing the life out of the town.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

At a meeting of Toronto University Senate, Knox College applied for affiliation.

The newly appointed batch of Queen's Counsel, so far as Toronto is concerned, is made up largely of mediocrities. Nothing else can be expected, when political considerations solely govern the appointments.

Mr. F. X. Lemieux has forwarded to Ottawa a petition to the Governor-General, asking the appointment of a medical commission to inquire into the mental condition of Louis Riel, and has followed it to the capital to press his application in person. Sir John is using every effort to shift the responsibility of dealing with Riel from his shoulders. If he would pardon Riel out and out, or fix a day for the execution of his sentence, the subject, which in its present state, is keeping up bad feeling, would be settled at once.

The annual statement of revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year ending June 30th, shows a deficit of $2,357,470. The total revenue is $32,970,465, and total expenditure $35,327,935, which includes $1,700,000 expended on account of the North-West rebellion, before the 1st of July.

Through the efforts of Dr. Coverton, Chairman of the Ontario Board of Health, the quarantine regulations against people from this Province entering the United States will be considerably relieved, the medical authorities at Washington having satisfied themselves of the sufficiency of our own sanitary precautions to prevent the spread of smallpox.

The fact that Sir Leonard Tilley has leased his residence in Ottawa to the Hon. Thomas White, has strengthened the belief that his retirement from the Government is in the near future. Sir Leonard does not relish the idea of facing the House next session with a deficit of something near two and half millions.

Marvelous Engineering.

The London Inner Circle railroad is a marvelous feat of engineering skill, says th Philadelphia Press. It runs throughout its entire distance under the busiest center of the largest city in the world, and the operations attending the excavation and construction have proceeded without serious injury to or interruption of business or traffic. Quicksands have been passed through, beds of old rivers spanned, lofty warehouses and massive buildings secured while their foundations have been undermined, and an intricate network of gas and water pipes sustained until supports had been applied to them from below. Added to this, the six main sewers had several times to be reconstructed. Day and night the work has been carried on for eighteen months, and now the engineers are able to announce that their tunnel is complete. The laying of the rails and the building of the stations are the only portions of the immense work that remains to be done, and in a very short time trains will be passing over the whole of this wonderful subterranean road.

Oranges

Very red little oranges, tomato shaped, with shiny skin, and done up in colored tissue paper, can be found this winter in every fruit store and on many stands. They are mandarin and Tangierine oranges from Florida. The two varieties are so nearly alike in looks and taste that persons unaccustomed to them cannot always tell which is which. The mandarins came originally from China, and the Tangierines from the country whose name they bear. In Florida they are called "kid-glove oranges," because, it is said, ladies can peel and eat them without soiling their gloves. Between the skin and the pulp is a loose layer of fibres, which is easily separated from the pulp. The skin has only to be broken, when it can be taken off dry and in one piece. In taste they are very different from other oranges of good quality. Instead of the spicy flavor that is distinguishable in ripe and fresh Indian River oranges, there is in the mandarins and Tangierines a taste suggesting that of new wine. The pulp is very tender, and there is little but juice within the delicate lining.

He Was in the "Agency" Business.

The base of the Apennines is an elegant country for road agents, and all the old books of travel are filled with stories of captures, ransoms, hair-breadth escapes and the like. But the railway ruined the business, and most of the gentlemen engaged in that lucrative branch of commerce have gone to America. A pious old dame who got on the train at Portland told me that she used to receive regular remittances from her son in Nevada, until he was executed by a lawless mob who would not listen to his explanations. She said he was in the "agency" business of some kind. Judging from the appearance of the neighborhood, the looks of the old woman and the particulars of the story, it was not difficult to guess what kind of "agency" her son had employed in. The peasants of this district are poor and adventurous; the Valley of the Reno has always been the highway of travel between the plains of Lombardy and those of Tuscany; the Apennine regions are close at hand to furnish places of refuge for lawless characters, and it is hereabouts that most of the highway robberies which followed the era of the tourist travel into Italy and preceded that of the railway, occurred.

Oscar Wilde on America.

A large audience assembled at the Crystal palace yesterday to hear Mr. Oscar Wilde's lecture on his impressions and experiences of America. Mr. Wilde (who has discarded knee-breeches and reassumed the prosaic trowser) said that the Americans are the noisiest people in the world, whose national occupation is catching trains. Pennsylvania, with its rocky gorges and woodland scenery, reminded him of Switzerland; the prairie of a piece of brown blotting-paper. Everything is twice as large as it should be; everywhere is twice as far as it should be. He visited Leadville, the chief characteristic of whose inhabitants is the constant use of the revolver. He lectured to them upon "Benvenuto Cellini, His Life and Works," and was reproved by his hearers for not having brought that artist with him. The explanation that he had been dead for some little time elicited the inquiry, "Who shot him?" Among the more elderly inhabitants of the South he found a melancholy tendency to date every event of importance by the late war. "How beautiful the moon is to-night!" he once remarked to a gentleman who was standing next to him. "Yes," was the reply, "but you should have seen it before the war." So infinitesimal did he find the knowledge and appreciation of art west of the Rocky mountains, that an art patron—one who in his day had been a miner—actually sued the railroad company for damages because the plaster cast of Venus of Milo, which he had imported from Paris, had been delivered minus the arms! And, what is more surprising still, he gained his case and damages.—Pall Mall Gazette.

WHO STRUCK BILLY PATTERSON?

A Singular Claim on a False Foundation Exploded by Investigation.

A telegram repeating an old story is about to start on its rounds again, and was received at this office yesterday. The story as told holds out a prospect of a solution to the mystery of "Who struck Billy Patterson?" but unfortunately for those who are very curious to to have the query answered, the narrative is not founded on the bed-rock of truth. It is to the effect that Mr. William Patterson, the father of Mme. Bonaparte, who was a prominent and respected Baltimore merchant, was the "Billy Patterson" who received the mythical blow, and that he offered a reward of $1,000 in his will for the discoverey of the perpetrator of the assault. The story goes on to describe the blow as having been given in Franklin County, Georgia, in 1837, the narrator being ignorant that that was two years after the Baltimore merchant's death. It is related that he owned land there which he had bought up on foreclosures of mortgages; that in the course of a riot, in which he wanted to act as peacemaker, he was felled by a blow which so injured him that Mr. Patterson left the reward to for him even after his death. A Mrs. Tennie A. Corey, of Athol, Warren County, N. Y., comes forward as the daughter of the man who struck Billy Patterson, and wants a finger in this mythical $1,000.

CONTINUE THE SEARCH

The story, as it comes from a correspondent in Atlanta, Ga., says: "Mr. Patterson's will containing the clause perpetuating the reward offered for the discovery of the man who had struck him, is on record in the office of the clerk of the court in the counties of Franklin and Elbert. Mrs. Corey writes to the ordinary of Franklin County as follows:

"My father struck Billy Patterson. It was a great many years ago, or at least I suppose it was, as I was a very small child when he told me about it. He is dead now. As near as I can find out he was wild and mischievous when young, and ran away from his home in Vermont, where he was born and raised by tender parents. He was of a roving disposition, and among other places which he visited was Franklin County, Georgia. As he was fond of sport he attended most of the public affairs. He attended the one in Georgia—I say the one in Georgia, because he left Georgia as soon as possible, and never returned to see how Billy Patterson came out. He said when the row begun and Mr. Peacemaker, as he called Billy, stuck his name in to break up the sport, he just leveled him, and "dug out" as soon as possible, and

He went to Cleveland, Ohio, and as he grew older and wiser he began to grow stricter, and became as good an engineer as was ever on the road, and run fifteen years on one road, besides others. My mother went from this place to Ohio and married my father, and I was born there. We came back here to live. My father's name was George W. Tilleston. He never knew there was a will made, and I am not sure that he would have cared to have told, as he had money enough; but as I am an invalid I might as well have the money if it is still offered.' The ordinary of Franklin County has had a transcript of the will taken, and has forwarded it to Mrs. Corey, at Athol, N. Y. The next step will probably be a demand upon the representatives of the late Mr. Patterson for the money, and, in the event of a refusal to pay it, the matter will become a subject of litigation in one of the United States district courts of New York."

Mr. Patterson's will may be of record in the counties of Franklin and Elbert, Ga., if he had land or other possessions there, but the original will is of record in the Register of Wills' office in Baltimore, where it was hunted up by a Sun reporter, and found to contain no such clause as described in the Georgia story. The will is a very voluminous document. It is a paper which has often been quoted from, and is in some sense historical. It was made in 1827, with various codicils up to the time of his death. The will was proved in February, 1835, a few days after his death.—From the Baltimore Sun.

A lady correspondent, writing to us from West Point, Miss., relates the following: "During the administration of Mr. Buchanan, the daughter of a Senator was married in Washington. The President, Cabinet and many members of Congress were in attendance. After the ceremony Mr. Buchanan stepped forward to present his congratulations to the bride—a prominent feature of which was a hearty kiss. A member standing in close proximity inquired: 'Is it understood that I am to follow suit?' 'No, sir,' replied the President, 'it is understood that I kiss for the Nation.'" The bride was a daughter of General Toombs, of Georgia, the member of Congress was General McQueen, of South Carolina.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Modesty of Man.

I overheard Senator Groome, of Maryland, discoursing to a rural admirer in one of the herdics on the way to the Capitol. Said he; "I never in my life have asked for an office or a vote. I believe the office should dust out and whoop up a hunt for the man. When I was elected Governor of Maryland the office stole up behind me unbeknown and slugged me in the back of the neck before I had fairly begun to realize what was up.

"Then when it came to the Senatorial game I was just as cool and unconcerned as you please. I said to the boys that of course I would appreciate the honor greatly, but that feelings of delicacy would prevent me from doing anything. I, of course, took pains to let my friends know that I wanted the place if it was coming my way, but that I could do nothing to influence their action. This last year, if I may be permitted the expression, I worked the same 'racket.' I never went near one man, but when the boys came to see me I did not hesitate to tell them just what I wanted."

"Oh!" said Groome's friend, would that there were more modest, unassuming men like you in public life—men who owe their advancement wholly to the yeast-like powers of their own modest merit. Oh—"

"My friend," said Groome, "I would like to hear the rest of that song of tribute, but my public duties compel me to leave you at this point."—Wash. Cor. Philadelphia News.

Princess Sally.

Sarah Winnemucca, daughter of old Chief Winnemucca, of the Piute tribe of Indians, is now a thoroughly civilized woman. She has lived in Boston and has written a book. In Nevada and California, where she is well known, she is called Princess Sally. There used to be a very pretty romance connected with Sarah's marriage to an army Lieutenant named Bartlett, who was stationed near the reservation in Nevada occupied by her tribe. Sarah was then a real Indian and made no pretense to style. She was also considerably younger than she is now. The story was that old Winnemucca contemplated a massacre of the whites and that he compelled his charming daughter to enter into the plot. She knew of Lieutenant Bartlett's fondness for her and she conditioned their marriage on his betraying the soldiers and joining her father. This it is said he agreed to do, and one night while he, Winnemucca and the girl were in conference the Lieutenant's commanding officer appeared on the scene, charged him with treachery, seized his sword and broke it. So much confusion was caused by this episode that the plot was abandoned. But Sarah and the Lieutenant were duly married.

The Princess knocks the romance out of this anecdote by telling the truth as follows: "Once Captain Wagner, in charge of the reservation, went away, leaving Lieutenant Bartlett in charge. As soon as he found himself alone Bartlett got drunk and at the end of a week he became possessed of the idea that the Indians were going to massacre him. He rode around like a madman, shouting and shooting, and it was with the greatest difficulty that he could be quieted. Some of his soldiers finally got him to bed, and when he sobered off he was all right. I married him after that."

An Australian Intoxicant.

Their own stimulant, kave, they continue to use in great quantities, and many of the Europeans have contracted a liking for it. All the Wairarapans have a taste for it, and marvel that any white man can acquire a penchant for such stuff. Its flavor resembles soap suds more than anything else one can compare it with. The root used is botanically known as that of the piper methisticum; it is hard and woody, hence the object of the chewing which liberates the juices of the root more freely than any other process. Europeans grate the root and pound it but admit that the liquor is not equal to the chewed. In Samoa the preparation of the kava bowl is attended with great ceremony, only the young unmarried girls being allowed to chew it. The root is cut up into fine pieces, and the girls, who are directed by the prettiest of them, first rinse their mouths, take up a piece, and when sufficiently masticated and formed into a ball, spit it into a bowl. The chief girl then calls for water, and after washing her hands, directs one of her companions to pour on the water while she stirs the root with her hand. When enough water is in, and the balls are properly mixed with the ingredients, she takes up a strainer made of fibers of the hibiscus, and passes it from side to side of the bowl. When the strainer is saturated she lifts it high above the bowl and squeezes the balls through the strainer in her hand. This is continued until the kava bowl is ready. It is contended by some of the Europeans who use chewed root that the mastication is perfectly dry and is a mere crushing process, but of course an amount of saliva must get incorporated in the process. The medicinal properties of kava are tonic and nervous sedative, and it is to these effects and not to its flavor that the taste for the drink arises.—Melbourne Leader.

The Sealskin Sacque Must Go.

The once fashionable sealskin sacque has too many rivals in the field to sustain its position as a coveted possession much longer. Very few women who can afford to dress richly and elegantly buy sealskins, and perhaps one in a thousand may own a long wrap made of the lovely fur, which she wears occasionally in the coldest weather, and then always in her carriage. The becomingness of seal fur has never been disputed, but in an evil hour the makers of fashions in furs ordained that it must be treated like some heavy textile fabric, and with awkward and ungraceful results. The natty jacket lengthened until it enveloped the figure in a tight-fitting tunnel, without the possibility of symmetry, and became a weight which a delicate frame could scarcely support. When the time comes, as it must, and the powers that be cut off fifteen inches from the skirt of this "fashionable" sealskin sacque, there will be general rejoicing, and everybody will wonder why silly custom ever cajoled one into believing a sealskin must be forty-five inches long!

The Methods of Pickpockets.

Purses and watches are the almost exclusive haul of the pickpocket, and 90 per cent of these thefts happen in crowds. Many of the quarrels to be heard in the streets of London are got up entirely for the purpose of collecting crowds for the pickpocket to work in. Some thieves operate simply with their hands, but others use a knife or razor, in order to cut through the coats and dresses, and especially to get the purses from the ladies. The trouser-pocket of a man can easily be emptied in a crowd by sliding down the seam with a razor, hooking the instrument into the aperture, and sawing from within outward. A thief will often do his work with an overcoat on his arm to hide the movements of his hands, this especially in the omnibus or train. Newspapers and handkerchiefs are also used for this purpose, and with the help of the latter it is common for scarf-pins to be stolen. "Excuse me, sir, you have some dust on your neck," says the thief to the victim, and in pretending to brush off the dust he removes the pin by grasping it through the handkerchief. When a watch is stolen it is generally separated by [illegible] hand, and the ring thereof between the thumb and finger of the other, and then giving a sharp twist, so that a tiny steel gives away and falls, the watch being taken and the chain left hanging. Inspector Shaw wears a watch that is fastened to its ring with a tough gold screw, and secures it with an India-rubber circlet, and he tells the present writer that if these precautions were generally taken there would be few watch robberies.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Blushing Chinese Bride.

There was great commotion in the east of Chinatown yesterday afternoon. A wedding in high life was on the tapis, and a crowd of 400 or 500 Chinamen surrounded the home of the bride, in an endeavor to catch a glimpse of the lady as she went to meet the happy man. When the girl started down the narrow stairs, in charge of an old woman, the curious heathens made a rush for the doorway, and when she appeared upon the sidewalk, with her blushing face hid behind a fan, the excitement became so intense that the services of the policeman were necessary to clear a way to the carriage. Every face in the surging crowd was adorned with a generous grin, and a chorus of "Ahs" greeted the rare and radiant maiden who was about to launch upon the uncertain sea of matrimony.

The bride's dress was of pale blue hi-long, trimmed with rare old toyah, while the pantaloons were of six full widths of yellow sigee. Her hair was dressed a la Hong Kong, there being no bangs of any description. Her charming little feet were half hidden in a bewitching pair of silk slippers with the heels knocked off. This vision of loveliness was carefully placed in a closed carriage and driven to the apartments of the bridegroom, who was wondering what sort of a companion his relatives and friends had selected for him.

There the scenes enacted on Morrison street were repeated as the bride was hurried up another flight of narrow stairs and disappeared from view, amid showers of rice and papers.

Robbed of his Fees.

Dr. Hauffe, the celebrated physician of Vienna, one day received a telegram from Cracow requesting him to repair thither with all haste, as Moses Abrahamson was very ill and required advice. This Moses was known to be one of the richest men of his tribe. The doctor, who had an enormous practice and was very busy at the time, wired back: "My fee will be two thousand florins." A second dispatch urged him to come without delay, but added that he might surely do it for less. "Not a kruetzer less than two thousand florins," was the reply from Vienna, whereupon a final telegram came to hand directing the physician to start at once. It was in the depth of winter, and bitterly cold, so that our medical man was anything but pleased at the prospect of the long journey. But what was his disgust on being met at the Cracow railway station by a deputation of long-coated Polish Jews bringing the tidings that he came too late, as Moses Abrahamson had died a few hours before. As there was no train back to Vienna that day he was perforce compelled to put up for the night at a hotel. Meanwhile the news of the great doctor's arrival had spread through the town, and sick people of every description, both Jews and Christians, besieged his door. So many afflicted persons touched his compassionate heart, and he freely gave them the advice they needed. When at last he got to the station and was about to step into the carriage a Polish Jew came sliding up to him with a knowing smile on his face and whispered in his ear: "I say, doctor, I only wanted to tell you that Moses Abrahamson isn't dead; not a bit of it; he was among the patients that you cured for nothing."

St. Andrew's Church.

Mr. Douglass, contractor, is making rapid progress with St. Andrew's Church building. The brickwork is finished and the roofing nearly completed, in fact, so far has the exterior work advanced that a good idea can be formed of the beautiful outside appearance the church will present when the scaffolding is cleared away. Work on the splendid groined ceiling, which will be so fine a feature of the inside of the new St. Andrew's, is going forward rapidly, and in this, as well as the other portions of the structure, the same regard is paid to substantial construction. There is little doubt that the church will be ready for consecration at the date decided on.

More Misrepresentation.

Mr. Beatty is out in another diffuse, rambling letter in the Review and in the very start sustains his reputation for misrepresentation, in saying that the EXAMINER admits that he was right in his misinterpretation of "the motion." No such admission was made. The matter in controversy is not whether Teachers' Institutes are beneficial to teachers—something the EXAMINER does not seek to deny. All are agreed on that point. The facts are simply these. A resolution fining teachers for absenting themselves from their duties without permission, was passed by the Board of Education. The object of this resolution was misrepresented by some person to the Minister of Education. Mr. Beattie subsequently admits that he wrote the letter containing such misrepresentation. The only conclusion admissable is that Mr. Beatty stated what was substantially untrue to the Minister of Education, for no "official information" was possible to be obtained that would warrant his writing as he did, the law allowing two days which the board could not interfere with. It is safe to say that, in face of his conviction of misrepresenting the Board Mr. Beatty has not yet withdrawn his statements made to the Minister. His position, in the premises is, peculiar. What would be thought of any employee who would write to the proprietor of an establishment misrepresenting and slandering the manager, who had the writer's engagement and dismissal in his power? How long would he be retained in a position in which he strove to injure the interests, from which he drew his support? Mr. Beatty himself is left to supply an answer—and his experience may save him the trouble of putting it in the form of a letter. If Teacher's Institutes have not been properly organized in the past, and if the conventions have not been successful, the teachers have only themselves and the executive to blame. It is folly to impute the failure of the convention in question to any action of the Board of Education in Peterborough. By the neglect of the executive, the very conditions were created necessary to make it a failure. The neglect to frame the programme and place it in the hands of the teachers as should have been done one month previous to the convention, is proof enough. If this and other arrangements have been neglected, if the teachers themselves or their representatives have bungled the matter, THE EXAMINER is not to blame. Besides, the school buildings is not the proper place for holding a convention. No room is large enough, and the seating is unsuitable for adults. There is no objection to Mr. Beattie's wandering in an epistolatory manner over outside territory, but it would be much more becoming for him to apologize to the Board for misrepresenting their action, and withdraw the contents of his letter to the Minister of Education.

Philharmonic Society.

This musical organization is progressing very satisfactorily. The first rehearsal of the "Widow of Nain" will be held on Thursday evening next.

An Oratorical Treat.

Dr. Wild is a forcible, eloquent and humorous speaker. He is well "up" in the craft and will, without doubt, deliver an eloquent and intensely interesting lecture on "A Masonic Mystery" in Bradburn's Opera House on Oct. 28th.

Going to Rome.

His Lordship Bishop Jamot announced yesterday in St. Peter's Cathedral that he would start for the capital of the Church, to pay his decennial visit to His Holiness, some time between the 10th and 16th of November. This visit should have been paid a year or two since but important diocesan affairs required the personal attention of his Lordship and his visit was, therefore, under dispensation, deferred.

Off to the Rockwoods.

A party of huntsmen left the Oriental Hotel at noon to-day, for the back lakes, where they expect to have a grand old time hunting the wild deer and other denizens of the forest for a couple of weeks. Mr. James E. McIntyre, "Sim" Morrison, H. Kent, W. Clancy, Professor Reid and Messrs. McFadden and Baker make up the party. Boarders at the Oriental expect to dine off venison every day for a month after their return.

Prof. Dorenwend at Grand Central Hotel Peterborough.

Baldness, gray hair, thin hair, dandruff, falling of the hair, &c., can all be remedied by the use of Dr. C. Dorenwend's Great German "Hair Magic," the most wonderful preparation for effectually restoring color and vitality of the hair, preventing falling, producing a heavy growth, making hair grow on bald spots, &c., ever discovered. It is unfailing in its results, as the many testimonials received daily by the sole owner and manufacturer for America, Prof. Dorenwend, of Paris Hair Works, Toronto, can testify. The Professor will be at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26, 27 and 28, and every one who wishes to try a bottle can procure it from him. The price is $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Call on him and procure a bottle.

News of the "Original."

A Milwaukee correspondent writes as follows:—

"I had not seen much of the "Original John Smith" lately, but to-day having business at Best's lager brewery, while passing through one of the departments I ran across the "original" busily engaged in washing out beer kegs, and indeed, he himself bore more resemblance to an exaggerated beer keg than anything else. He told me he liked the Milwaukee lager so well that he applied for the washing out situation. He thinks he will stay at it all winter and in the spring strike back for Peterborough. John has been working in the East Water street sewer, and while at work in the sewer, Smith got lost, and tore his pants and lost one of his cowhides. I may say he has been employed by several coal barge companies, heaving coal on top deck, and did very well until a terrible windstorm came up and filled his full-cloth sails, which wildly tossed him to and fro to the cold angry water below. John crawled out as heavy as lead. You bet he is quiet a curiosity here among every one that sees him walking along like a Milwaukee policeman."

ACCOMMODATION.

A good article on this subject appears in the last number of the Dominion Dry Goods Report, from the pen of Mr. Bannel Sawyer, principal of Peterborough Business College. It is worthy of careful reading:—

"Accommodation is the strength and the weakness of our business world to-day. Just as in many a man, his best trait, perverted, may be his worst, so of the community, that element which, properly and correctly utilized, may become and has, indeed, often been, a tower of strength, when preverted and improperly applied, has become the great weakness of the trade. Bills of exchange, accommodation bills of all kinds, cannot well be overated as commercial agents; for it is well known that by them mainly it is that trade has been developed and carried on, and assumed such gigantic proportions.

They have been called "the bank notes of commerce," and certainly they do actually represent to an astonishing extent the circulating medium of the world. A well-known writer has said that 'the extent of a country's trading power is shown by its accommodation bills.' This is very true, but then a country may be hopelessly bankrupt and yet, by this measure of power, seem tremendously enterprising and alive. At the present, probably more than at any past time, bills are circulated for a purely accommodating and fictitious purpose and represent absolutely nothing more than the paper upon which they are written; as a leading financial writer has said: 'A little paper, some ink, a great lie and the accommodation bill is issued.'

It is this mal-use of "accommodation" of which we desire to be understood to be speaking. Gold is the recognized base of national currency, but in the business world, any good security is as good as a gold base, and upon the strength of such a base, together with the actual performance of a bona fide purchase, sale and deliverance of goods, the bill may be issued. But when a bill is given which represents no transaction beyond its own manufacture, then we say it is high time to raise the voice in condemnation of such a false way of carrying on business. To-day, our country is teeming with "bogue bills." All over the land, in every town and city, may be seen, day after day, the haggard faces of two-thirds of our business men on their accommodation tramp to the banks.

From the most reliable sources we have it that on a leading street, in one of the brightest towns in Canada, one-half of the merchants are floating by the friendly aid of these eventually destructive documents, and upon equally good authority we learn that in the main street of one of our most noted cities, more than two-thirds of our business men are helplessly and hopelessly bankrupt, but for the wonderfully magical effects of "accommodation." Every great failure brings to light tens of thousands of dollars circulating in this way, that have not a pretense to genuineness. And what we wonder at is that bank managers wink at the fraud when it is gotten up on such an extensive scale.

No doubt it is often, perhaps always difficult to determine a spurious from a genuine bill. The wording is such as to furnish no clue—and if an inquiry were to be instiuted, evasion would be possible.

The law is supposed to regulate things, so as to prevent dishonesty. But this is dishonesty, to put the words "for value received" on a bill, when no value has been, nor ever will be received. And so an unprincipled merchant may evade the law by simply inserting the words "for value received." If the law declared it felony to insert, the words when no value had been received, then the trouble would at once very materially diminish.

The best remedy is for the banker to refuse paper of which he has the least doubt, and thus he will be spared trouble. This has been put as follows: "Accommodation bills, in many cases, like spectres, are ever dogging the footsteps of commerce—the terror of the steady trader, and the horror of the banker." Clearing away the "bogus paper" of the country would bring many to what they might choose to term premature insolvency. But the general good that would result would be well worth the effort. Trade would increase and launch out, a more healthful feeling would follow, when the commercial atmosphere had been cleared of such great doubt and mistrust, and the peace, happiness and prosperity of the country would be enlarged.

This paper is written in anticipation of the crash that may soon come in the financial upheaval of the state and the business community, and one way to avoid its destructive effects, is by stopping this false system of accommodation."

Port Hope.

Work was begun Monday on the electric light; the poles are being put up. Mr. Quinlan intends obtaining power from Beamsville falls. The lights will be ready by the 15th November.—Times.

Latest Advices.

A Humorous and Instructive Lecture by Chancellor Nelles.

Rev. Dr. Nelles, Chancellor of Victoria University, Cobourg, lectured last evening to a rather limited audience in Charlotte street Methodist Church. The chair was taken by Mr. James Stevenson, who introduced the reverend doctor to the audience promptly at eight o'clock. Dr. Nelles, after explaining that his lecture was prepared for delivery before a literary society at Ottawa, announced its subject as "Latest Advices." Every man's advice, he said, would follow in the wake of his character, hence a rogue's advice would be rascally, a fool's foolish and so on. Advisers did not profess to know more than other people in a general way, but each advise others. The lawyer advised his clients, the doctor his patients, preachers their congregations, husbands their wives, and sometimes wives their husbands, and the husbands minded their advice too, in such matters as going abroad without their overcoats or refraining from endorsing their neighbors' promissing notes. What everyone wanted was the "Latest Advices," something suited to the necessities of the times, and it was with these he would endeavour to deal. He then proceeded with his lecture which consisted of six separate heads or advices as follows:—First, "Do not be alarmed at the signs of the times." Second, "Do not expect to solve the problem of the Universe." Third, "Let us not turn pessimists." Fourth, "Let us not encourage this modern dream of equality." Fifth, "Let us remember the compensations nature provides for all of us"; and sixth and last "Let every man mind his own business."

Each of those heads the lecturer made the basis of a pithy paragraph, sparkling with refined wit, and bristling with unanswerable argument, opening a way, as it were, to the sympathies of his hearers by his humourous anecdotes, and then driving the moral home by the force of his logic.

The audience were delighted, and a vote of thanks proposed at the conclusion of the lecture by Rev. Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. Wm. Cluxton, was enthusiastically carried. Rev. Mr. Davis, in moving it, spoke with evident pleasure of the old time relations existing between himself and the reverend lecturer, which called forth some amusing reminiscences on both sides. Rev. F. H. Wallace also spoke of the great benefit and pleasure he had derived at all times from the discourses of the reverend and learned doctor.

Educational Notes.

The attendance at the London Collegiate Institute last month averaged 205.

There are 65 pupils and 5 teachers in the Kindergarten department of the Hamilton central school. The lady principal gets a salary of $1,000 per annum.

The Toronto public school board at its last meeting very properly suspended a lady teacher for being late four times during the month.

It was once said by a great and good man: "He that makes a little child happier for a single hour is a co-worker with God." What abundant opportunities are enjoyed by the public school teacher of earning this great distinction!

The adoption of one series of school readers has given universal satisfaction throughout the province. Is there any good reason, inquires an exchange, why the same uniformity and convenience cannot be attained in the other school text books? We have now on the authorized list some six different different grammars, nine different geographies, four arithmetics and nearly as many algebras and euclids. This state of affairs is very perplexing to teachers and expensive to pupils, especially those who move about frequently. Besides it is often a dead loss to the booksellers. We hope Mr. Ross will carry on the good work he has begun with respect to the text books, until he simplifies, and cheapens, and renders more efficient the whole text book system.

Eastern Crisis.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—A despatch from Pierot, Servia, says:—The Servians are massing on the frontier in full force. King Milan is evidently in earnest and an immediate crisis seems inevitable.

CONSTANTINOBLE, Oct. 26.—The Sultan does not relish the idea of another Balkin conference. But the German ambassador, acting under explicit instructions from Prince Bismarck, has used such pressure that the Porte has not only been obliged to consent but even to take the initiative. The military preparations are still being pushed on vigorously.

It is believed the Czar is ready to insist on the Turkish occupation of Eastern Roumelia if the incorporation of the latter province with Bulgaria can be prevented in no other way.

Important communications have passed between the Sultan and King Milan. The the Porte would be in no way displeased to see the Servian army attack Bulgaria, provided Eastern Roumelian Territory were respected.

The excitement is so great among the Greeks that it is expected the Government will have no other choice than to enter Macedonia or see itself swept away.

NISSA, October 26.—The reports that the Servians had crossed the Bulgarian frontier is officially denied by the Servian Government.

The Burmese Warcloud.

Ready to Burst.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—The foreign residents at Mandalay, the capital of Burmah, are being boycotted by the natives. The Burmese envoy who arrived at Rangoon recently, and who said he was on his way to Germany to sign a treaty with that country, but whose real object, it is thought, was to watch the military preparations at Rangoon, now announces that he must return to Manadalay to translate for his Government the British ultimatum as there is no native official there able to do so.

Burmah to be Invaded.

CALCUTTA, Oct. 26.—Lord Dufferin has received orders from the Home Government for the immediate despatch of troops to Burmah.

A Valid Objection.

A man who had been convicted of stealing horses and whose penalty was assessed at twenty years' imprisonment, was asked the usual question by Judge Noonan, of San Antonio, who was on the bench.

"Prisoner, do you know of any reason why sentence should not be pronounced on you according to law?"

"Why, judge, of course I do. It would break me up in business."

Cavan.

A harum-scarum Cavan mail carrier a day or two ago utilized the small-pox scare to gain for Her Majesty's mail a clear road. He folded a poster printed by the Cavan Health Board, headed in large letters, "smallpox," so that the headline alone was visible, and fastening this across his breast he proceeded on his route, and without a single exception, every vehicle he met skied off as close to the fence as possible, and during that trip H. A BIG DEFICIT

With high taxation crushing the life out of the country it would be thought that such a thing as a lack of funds to pay running expenses would be impossible. But no matter how fast the taxes flow into the treasury, the outgo, through extravagant and corrupt, expenditure and waste—reckless, wanton waste—empties the strong box. The Tory organs assert that the N. P. has made the people prosperous, yet, in face of this "prosperity" there is an enormous deficit. With dull times, the hardest times the country has ever known, Sir Richard Cartwright with a tariff of only 17½ per cent. had a deficit of $600.000 less than Sir Leonard has this year, with an average tariff of double that figure. The deficit of 1885 places the defenders of the Government and its protective policy in a dilemma. They must accept the position that either Sir Leonard is an incompetent and extravagant Finance Minister, or that the National Policy is a failure. If the deficit is due to hard times and commercial depression, then the N. P. is a failure: if it is due to extravagant expenditure, then the Government is unfit for the position it occupies. Whatever solution may be selected, the fact that our financial position is alarming remains. The official statement of revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1885, has at length been published. The reason for withholding it is fully explained—the deficit is $2,357,470. The total revenue is $32,970,465, and the total expenditure $35,327,935. Sir Leonard Tilley's estimate was revenue, $32,000,000; expenditure, $30,611,639; surplus, $1,388,361. He was nearly five millions out in his expenditure, which has increased from $31,185,343 in 1884 to $35,327,635, an increase of $4.142,592 in one year. The deficit for 1884-85 is larger by over $600,000 than the largest deficit that occurred any year while Sir Richard Cartwright was Minister of Finance, and Sir Richard's dificit was due to a falling revenue, caused by general commercial depression, while the deficit of this year has been caused by increased expenditure and extravagance. The total revenue for 1884-85 was $1,020,887 more than in the preceding year. The blunder of the Government is giving notice of their intention to increase the whiskey tax forced into the treasury in 1884-85 over a million dollars that properly belonged to the now current year, and but for this the deficit would be a million dollars greater than it is. During the month of June, 1885, the revenue collected was $2,235,583, while the expenditure for that month was $2,241,304. Between 30th of June and 20th October $1,101,813 of the revenue belonging to the fiscal year of 1884-85 was collected, while the expenditure chargeable to 1884-85, collected between June and October, was $4,882,357, making a total revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year as before stated. Shortly before the session closed Mr. McLean, acting-Minister of the Interior, stated in reply to Sir Richard Cartwright that the receipts from Dominion lands for the last year, only exceeded the capital expenditure on Dominion lands by $40,000 or so, and as there was in 1883-84 an expenditure of $116,000 on Dominion lands, charged to income, it is clear that the total receipts from that source in 1884-85 will not meet the expenditure thereon.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In the light of the result Conservative election arguments are unanswerable. If the money is good, that settles it.

The Mail says "Reform is a scienoer" It may be, but its exponents haven't "got it down so fine" as the Dominion Government has the science of political corruption.

The Chief Justice of Nova Scotia has stated publicly, and while inflicting a sentence of life-long imprisonment upon the outrager of a child, that in future he will punish crimes against women and children with the lash and halter. May his words, prays the Witness, and actions be accepted as a precedent by every judge in the land.

Lord Lorne has tried several lines of usefulness in his brief career. As a royal son-in-law he did not meet with marked success, as a Governor-General of Canada, he filled his term with credit. He had indifferent success in reconstructing the empire. His shy at poetry brought a storm from the critics. Now he has taken to politics, and become an ultra Radical. He can't do worse unless he becomes an ultra Tory.

When the late Lord Shaftesbury was Lord Ashley, by which title he was long prominent, there were some 400 peers, and probably 200 had grown up eldest sons, and yet, out of this large body of men, his is about the only name standing out as that of a nobleman who gave his time, energy, money, and the prestige of his position to the cause of benevolence.

The Tory newspapers are seized with a fresh spasm of fear of Hon. Edward Blake. They are trying to convince themselves that what they wish is true—that Hon. Mr. Blake contemplates retirement from political life. Their paeans of praise in such an event could only be equalled by their rejoicing, when a result shows that a corruption fund has done its work.

There seems to be a prospect of an attempt being made to induce Toronto to adopt the Scott Act. In view of this, the Liberal Temperance Union has declared war and is mobilizing its forces. A manifesto has been issued, in which an urgent appeal is made to those interested in the success of the principles of the Union. The manifesto is issued in the name of the officials, among which appear the names—well known now in Peterborough—of Mr. J. Gordon Mowat and Mr. C. Gordon Richardson, as secretaries.

Lord Lorne in Danger.

He Has to Flee from Hamstead During a Riot between Radicals and Tories—A Disgraceful Affair.

A London despatch says:—"It is now evident that the Parliamentary campaign will not pass off without serious rioting in many quarters, as party feeling, which already was high, daily grows more bitter. The Marquis of Lorne, the Liberal candidate for Hampstead, went down to Brentford town, seven miles west of London, to deliver a campaign speech. While addressing the electors a mob assaulted him with rotten eggs, and some of them, gaining the platform, smashed his hat over his head. The supporters of the Marquis rushed to his rescue, and a fight ensued. The noble Lord hastily departed from the scene, ran through the street in a drenching rain to the railway station, and immediately departed for London. Meanwhile the row continued, the supporters of the Marquis being severely handled, and, becoming discouraged by the desertion of their champion, they finally retreated, leaving their contestants masters of the field. The latter then seized the platform and passed a resolution condemning the policy of the Liberals. When the Queen's son-in-law made his appearance as a Liberal candidate for Hamstead it occasioned considerable surprise, and when he put forward in his address advanced Radical opinions, the surprise was greatly increased. He opposed Mr. Chamberlain's programme of free education, and advocated immediate dis-establishment in Scotland. He championed the principles of the free land league, and, with a view to the encouragement of the subdivision of land, suggested that the sales of large estates en bloc should be subject to heavy taxation, while sales of land to be divided into smaller lots should be left duty free. As to the House of Lords, he hardly went so far as the Hampstead Radicals desired, being of opinion that the venerable institution might be amended by an infusion of elected members. He favored the extension of local self-government to Ireland.

Fair Representation.

Sir Richard Cartwright, in his speech at Lucknow, suggested a change in the system of representation. His idea is something like this: The inhabitants of each constituency are pretty equally divided in their political opinions. Suppose there are 2,000 voters in a riding, 900 of them will be hard shell Conservatives and 900 hard-shell Reformers. 1,800 will vote straight every time. The remaining 200 are the ones who decide whether the constituency shall return a Conservative or a Reformer. Out of that number of men who have not strong convictions and definite alliances, there will be some who can be corrupted—by money, by promises of office or of personal gain, or by other influences such as should not decide the fate of the country. Sir Richard thinks it is quite too easy to corruptly influence a small number of men.

The cure he proposes is this: Instead of letting each constituency of 2,000 voters return one member, he would group, say, 5 of the constituencies, and let each voter in the group vote for 5 members. Out of the 10,000 voters there would be 1,000 "loose fish," and it would be too much for any candidate to undertake to corrupt 1,000 men. The result would be a change from the influences now too often depended upon to a purer method of making conversions. Incidentally, the evil of Gerrymanders would be done away with. Minorities would have a fair representation. A majority of 3,000 votes in the Province of Ontario, for instance, could not give to one side two-thirds of the votes in Parliament. Each candidate, having a wider constituency to appeal to, and a greater diversity of interests to regard, would see the necessity of adopting statesmanlike rather than local views of public questions.

Renfrew's Revising Barrister.

The revising barrister for South Renfrew is a good specimen. During last winter his law business was so great that he had to give it up and accept a sessional clerkship at $3 a day for the session. While here he was served with a notice that application had been made to strike his name off the rolls of the Ontario Law Society for non-payment of dues. Mr. Driscoll is a good mate of John Shields and friend Mahaffey, of Muskoka. The South Renfrew man does not even live in the riding, but has been imported from Pembroke and appointed over the the heads of many excellent lawyers in the south riding, many of whom are influential Conservatives.—Hamilton Times.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The Thanksgiving dinner announced for the 5th of November, in connection with the Bensfort Methodist church, has been postponed until the 12th, owing to Thanksgiving Day having been changed by the Governor-General. Arrangements are being made for an enjoyable afternoon, and it is hoped there will be a large attendance. Addresses will be delivered by the Rev. I. Tovell, chairman of the district, and Rev's. Johnston and McCamus. The choir has charge of the musical part of the programme. We expect to have a good time, and if any of our friends in Peterborough will do us the favor of driving out, we promise them a good dinner and a pleasant afternoon.

The Lost Grave.

[About ten years ago the Detroit Free Press commented on a touching incident which occurred in that city and which is substantially as follows: An old woman was seen wandering through the old, deserted graveyard on Russel street. She had buried a child there half a century before, and in all those years she had not seen the little grave; but her undying love for her child brought her clear back across the State alone to have a last look at the grave. She found the old yard cut up by streets, and of the hundreds of mounds and headstones which she once saw, but a score or so were left. Under the dying willows she passed along, brushing the moss from the headstones and trying to find the stone which bore the words, "Our Willie." Her search was fruitless. She had hoped that strangers' hands might have kept the grave as when she last saw it, and she turned sadly away from the barren spot, the tears falling on her wrinkled cheek; and when the people spoke to her in sympathy, she sobbed out, "I'm afraid I can't find him in Heaven—Heaven's so large!" This sad incident suggested the following lines]:

They saw her wand'ring in a graveyard old;
They heard her sobbings in the willows' shade,
And well they knew her heart desired to hold
Some sweet communion with her sacred dead.

Full fifty years had passed since she had seen
The spot where rested Willie's lifeless form;
And yet her love, thro' every changing scene,
Was as a mother's love,—unchanged and warm!

But she had hoped, thro' every lonely year,
That grave might not be slighted or forgot,
But that some passing stranger, kind and dear,
Would cast on it a sweet forget-me-not.

She hoped some one might scatter daisy seeds
In springtime o'er her Willie's little mound,
And for the absent dead do loving deeds
When autumn leaves were covering the ground.

Alas! she found the old yard almost gone,
For fifty years had made a cruel change,
And only here and there she saw a stone,
While all the scene to her was new and strange.

The town had grown to be a city grand;
The secret charms of the long ago had fled
Before Time's hostile and o'erpowering hand,
And those who lived were crowding out the dead.

But that old mother's heart had brought her back
To view that grave ere she had passed away,
And shed on it affection's tear, and deck
It gently o'er with flowers bright and gray.

'Mong leaning headstones, covered o'er with moss,
She sought the grave she had not seen for years;
But, after walking to and fro across
The barren fields, she then gave way to tears.

Ah, me! that mother came alone so far,
With burdened, anxious heart and features wan;
But from her sight had sunk hope's last faint star,
For Willie's little grave was lost and gone!

Kind words were spoken to her by passers-by
Who saw the tears fall on her wrinkled cheek;
Her tale of woe aroused a sympathy
Too strong for any human tongue to speak.

And while she stood beneath the dying trees,
Once more to view the fields so bleak and lone,
Her sobs went out on every passing breeze,
As she remembered glories that had flown.

She left the scene, nor e'er returned again;
Her heart was broken with her bitter grief;
She tarried thro' a few more years of pain,
Then Death's kind angel brought her sweet relief.

And as she swept thro' Heaven's gates of gold
Into the brightness of that glorious place,
That mother's heart beat with joy untold
When her own Willie ran to her embrace.

—Thomas J. Macmurray.

A Remarkable Eyesight.

It is recorded by Humboldt that he was traveling in South America under conditions which rendered it necessary for the party to divide, and to reach their destination by different routes. As he and those who remained with him approached the appointed meeting place, he said to the Indian guide that he wondered what had become of the others. The guide looked at him with some surprise, and pointing across a wide mountain gorge, one side of which they were traversing, replied: "There they are." Humboldt himself could see nothing but rocks and verdure, but ultimately, being assisted by the guide as to the position of the other party, succeeded in discovering them by the aid of a telescope; and then, by making the guide describe the order of march and the relative position of the several individuals, obtained proof that he actually saw them plainly with his unaided eyes. An experience of equal significance, if of a less striking character, may be had in any Highland deer forest, where deer, which are conspicious to the eye of the keeper, can only be seen with difficulty and uncertainty and after much pointing out of neighboring land-marks by visitors who are habitual dwellers in towns. In other words, the acuteness of sight of the average citizen is much inferior to that of the average Scotch forester; while the acuteness of sight of the forester is probably much inferior to that of the savage. People are too prone to accept this as something necessary or inevitable, and to think of the forester or the savage as the possessor of some special acuteness which has been conferred upon him by training and practice, instead of thinking of the citizen as a person who, by reason of unfavorable circumstances, falls short of the acuteness of vision which he ought to possess.—London Times.

How Heat is Measured.

"Thermometers are curious instruments," said Joseph Spitz, of the firm of L. Black & Co. to a Detroit Free Press reporter. "Sometimes we find one that is all right at certain points and at others it will vary several degrees."

"What causes the variations?"

"The irregularities of the tube. They are frequently imperfect. At some point the tube may be too large and when the mercury rises to that point it is depressed too much. The tubes have to be seasoned. This requires a year or two. Glass changes almost like wood. When it is new it expands, contracts and warps almost as badly as green wood. Frequently people come in and tell me that their thermometers registered fifteen or twenty degrees below zero when in fact it was only ten or twelve degrees below. All cheap thermometers vary more or less."

"Where are the best thermometers made?"

"In London. There are two manufactories in this country, one at New Lebanon, N. Y., and the other at Rochester. The imported thermometers are too [illegible] use."

"How are they made?"

"The tube is blown the size wanted, the top being left open. The bulb is heated to expel the air and while hot is inverted in a cup of mercury. As the tube cools the mercury is drawn up into the tube. The open end is then closed up and the tube placed on a scale. It is put into water of a known temperature and the point to which the mercury rises is marked. A number of tests of this sort are made before the instrument is placed on the market."

"How can we tell whether our thermometers are accurate?"

"There is at Harvard University a place for testing thermometers. They are carefully examined at various temperatures and any variation is marked. A certificate is given with every thermometer examined."

"Which scale do you regard as the best?"

"The centigrade, by all means, is the one that should be generally adopted. In this system the freezing point of water is taken as zero and the boiling point of water at the sea level is 100. The Reaumur scale is the same except that the boiling point is 80."

Mr. Spitz showed the reporter a number of thermometers made for scientific uses, which are very expensive. For the use of brewers there is a thermometer about three feet long, with a bulb two feet in length. The scale of this is short and is marked for only a few degrees above the freezing point. An instrument of English make was also shown, which is filled with a green composition containing phosphorus, and is visible in the dark.

"Spirit thermometers," continued Mr. Spitz, "are used for very cold climates, as mercury congeals at thirty degrees below zero. They cannot be used to measure extreme heat, as above a certain temperature the liquid expands too fast. It boils at 160 degrees. For very high temperature the pyrometer takes the place of the thermometer. The heat is measured by the expansion of metals, and the instrument will measure heat accurately up to 7,000 degrees. There is a thermometer made in Buffalo on the same principle as the pyrometer and can be placed in the back of a watch."

Drilling and Boring Wood.

The hand-drill or breast-drill, originally intended for the hand-drilling of metals, has taken its place among wood-working tools. In many instances it has displaced the bit-brace, or at least has filled a requirement left unsatisfactorily supplied by the bit-brace. The breast-drill may be used for drill, gimlet or bit, and its speed—on the best forms—may be changed at will without a change of speed of the hand. It has its advantage also, in the more natural motion of the hand—the vertical crank movement instead of the horizontal crank motion. A drilled hole in wood, for whatever purpose, is better than a bored hole. The drill cuts a clean hole; not merely finding its way between the fibres by displacing them, but removing the material entire as it advances. The gimlet form of wood borer is crude at best; a thread at the end is supposed to enter the solid wood and by spiral friction pull the cutting portion of it. The cutting portion is a twist like a twist drill or auger, supposed to deliver the chips—which it never does deliver. The pressure of the hand is necessary to force the gimlet into the wood, and the pull of the hand is required to release it and empty the chips. The drill cuts a clean hole, and has none of the objections of the gimlet. Unlike the gimlet, it may be resharpened so long as it lasts. Its speed in the breast drill is very much greater than that of the gimlet in the bit-brace.

Made a Reduction.

A life insurance agent who had been working up a considerable business in Fort Scott, Kan., was one day approached by a tough looking customer, who wanted to take out a $5,000 policy. He inquired about the cost and other particulars, and finally remarked:

"Well, stranger when you kin put the figgers down about one-half you kin send fur me."

"Oh, I couldn't do that."

"Mebbe not, but them's my terms."

When the man had departed the agent went out to inquire who he was, and a citizen replied:

"Why, that's Bill Callahan. What did he want?"

"Wanted some insurance at half-rates."

"Give it to him."

"I'll see him hanged first! Why should I make a reduction to him?"

"Because you've got insurance on at least twenty of us here, and if you don't come to Bill's figures he'll kill a full dozen of us before the year is out. Better consult the interest of the company and make a reduction."

The next day William had a policy on which a shake purse paid the premiums. —Detroit Free Press.

Rev. A. H. Munro, Misses Ellsworth, Gilmore, Huston, Minore, Stratton and Yelland, Messrs. Coleman, Duff, Eastwood, Matthews and others will take part, and an enjoyable evening may be anticipated.

Young Men's Class.

All young men not having other duties to perform, should attend the class for Bible study in the Y.M.C.A., Rooms, on Tuesday evenings. Last week the subject considered was "The form of the Bible," and to-night's subject is "The Veracity of the Bible." The Rev. F. H. Wallace, who conducts the class makes the hour pass in a very interesting way. The attendance is good, and is expected to be largely increased to-night.

An Investment That Will Accumulate.

A bet of $500 a side was made yestetday between Mr. C. W. Sawers and Mr. J. Garvey as to where the new post-office will be erected, Mr. Sawers, of course, backing the syndicate site, while Mr. Garvey bets on the Phelan freehold. Mr. C. A. Weller, with whom the stakes were deposited, now holds $1,600 on the event. The amount is invested at 3 per cent. per annum, and with interest and compound interest may be expected to double itself before the Dominion Government settles the bet and provides Peterborough with suitable postal accommodation.

Back From the Hunt.

Last night about ten o'clock the Lundy, Morrow et al hunting and camping party returned to town safely from their back lakes bivouac. The original party of six was increased by the addition, subsequently, of Messrs. R. R. Wood and R. B. Lundy. During the fortnight's operations the party were successful in bringing down nine deer—a deer and an eighth to each member of the party, besides, a due proportion of small game. The party experienced delightful weather during the daytime, but rain almost every night interfered with moonlight strolls. On the way home the camping outfit was thoroughly drenched with rain. As to deer, they are not very plentiful, but as to hunters, the "woods are full of them." The returned party report the great success of the Clegg, Cameron, O'Brien et al party. They had secured nine deer on Sunday last. The band of the "Bould McIntyre" was encountered en route. They were somewhat at sea, but the returning hunters made them happy by supplying the "lost tribe" with a guide who had had his day.

Dorenwend Arrived.

Prof. Dorenwend has arrived at the Grand Central Hotel, and his display in the different styles of hair goods is something surpassingly excellent. Every lady or gentleman requiring anything in these lines should not fail to pay the Professor a visit during his stay here. The different designs and styles of hair goods for ladies excel anything ever offered by the professor previously, and his gents' Toupees, for bald crowns, are so exactly in imitation of nature that the difference cannot be detected. He has also a supply of the celebrated Hair Magic, for making hair grow on bald spots, and also a stock of the Eureka Hair Destroyer, which removes all superfluous hair from ladies' faces or arms, without pain. In Belleville and other cities and towns—wherever the professor has been advertised—he has met with great success, in many instances having been unable to attend to all who called on him. This attests the high reputation he has gained in his line. Call promptly, for he will only remain here to-day and to-morrow.

Scott Act Investigation.

The investigation into the circumstances attending the recent Scott Act election was resumed before Judge Dennistoun at his chambers, this morning. Messrs. Weller and O'Meara conducted the inquiry, and Mr. D. W. Dumble looked after the interests of the Scott Act Association. The first person examined was David Rose, who acted as a deputy returning officer in Dummer. His testimony was in regard to the voting being carried on in a back room of a manse instead of in the school house.

George A. Williams, secretary of the Scott Act Association, testified in regard to the lists supplied by him to the returning officer. They were not, he said, intended to be officially used and were merely sent to Dr. Ford to guide him in making the sub-divisions. Witness did not know whether they were sent at the request of the returning officer or not. There was no pretence made that they were absolutely correct.

After Mr. Williams' evidence had been taken, Mr. Weller asked an adjournment of two weeks, in order that a witness named Banham, and the returning officer, might be examined. He would then, he said, decide whether he would ask the formality of a recount of the votes.

Mr. Dumble opposed so long an adjournment, claiming that Mr. Weller was only seeking to gain time.

It was decided to adjourn till the 9th of November.

Local Government for Ireland.

Meeting to Form a Branch of the National League in Peterborough.

A preliminary meeting for the purpose of taking steps for the organization in Peterborough of a branch of the Irish National League was held in the Grand Central Hotel last night. A considerable number of gentlemen—sympathisers with the national cause—were present. Rev. P. Conway was called to the chair, and Mr. J. O'Meara appointed secretary.

After a few opening remarks, the Rev. gentleman introduced Mr. John P. Sutton, of Quebec, the organizer of the League in Canada Mr. Sutton, in an able and eloquent speech, explained the object of the national league. Its purpose was to provide funds for the support of the Irish Parliamentary party, to enable them to carry on their struggle for the establishment in Ireland of a local government like that which we possess in Canada. This party was composed of men of ability, journalists, members of the bar and other professions, who, in many instances, had to give up lucrative positions to battle for their country's welfare. They had to combat with the seductions of [illegible] bribes, and offers of office were not wanting to encourage them to betray the national cause. The little party of forty who had so manfully resisted these temptations, were deserving, the speaker asserted, of help and support from Irishmen and descendants of Irishmen of all creeds and classes. The struggle could not be carried on without funds, and the Irish people looked to their brethren in Canada, as elsewhere, to assist them pecuniarily as well as by their voice and sympathy otherwise. With eighty or ninety men at his back, Mr. Parnell could insist upon a proper measure of self government being meted out to Ireland. Mr. Sutton then explained how a branch of the National League was formed. A person might contribute to the parliamentary fund, and yet not be a member of the League, still he hoped a large branch would be formed, as the moral influence exercised by large numbers combining and voicing their sentiments in regard to their native or mother land could not well be exaggerated. He had recived the most generous encouragement from protestants and catholics alike elsewhere. He hoped the same would be the case in Peterborough. Mr. Sutton then pointed out the progress of the association in Canada and the United States, and gave an account of the amounts received and forwarded to Mr. Parnell. Mr. Sutton wound up a fine speech by pointing out that Mr. Parnell's aims were really of as much advantage to the English and Scotch as to the Irish. The power to make laws of mere local utility in a Parliament of their own choice, on their own soil, would relieve the already over-burthened Parliament of a vast mass of work and enable them to devote their time to the compli cated questions of foreign and general policy in a thorough manner.

After the Rev. Father Conway and other gentlemen had spoken, it was decided to call a public meeting for the purpose of obtaining contributions to the Parliamentary fund, the time selected for the holding of the same, to be announced in the newspapers. The following resolution was moved by J. O'Meara, seconded by John Hackett, and unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the demand of the Irish people that the laws for the government of their native land should be made on their own soil, and by their own countrymen, for their country's benefit, is only the just and righteous privelige accorded to every nation and is the right enjoyed by the people of this Dominion.

And whereas the means employed by the Irish people for the recovery of this right, of which they have been so long and unjustly deprived, are such as are sanctioned by constitutional law and the precepts of christianity!

Therefore be it resolved that we, the Irishmen of Peterborough, do hereby express our hearty sympathy with the people of Ireland in their struggle to obtain those rights which it is our happiness as citizens of Canada to possess, and that, mindful of our Irish origin, we do hereby pledge ourselves to give the Irish people for the purposes aforesaid, such financial aid and assistance as our means will permit.

Mr. O'Meara was appointed to receive and acknowledge contributions to the fund pro tem.

The meeting then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 28, 1885.

Sir Leonard's Parting Gift.

The Dominion accounts for the year ending June 30th, 1885, have been made up, and although cooked in the usual fashion, although the receipts from North-west lands go to revenue account, and the expenditure on surveys, etc., is charged to capital, and although in the Intercolonial Railway accounts much is charged to capital which should be charged to ordinary expenditure, the deficit is $2,357,476.

The enormous deficit has been caused, not so much by a falling off in revenue, as an increase in expenditure.

The expenditure was	$35,327,935
The revenue was	$32,970,465
The deficit was	$ 2,357,470

This exceeds by $600,000 the greatest deficit in the late Government's time.

Sir L. Tilley estimated the revenue at 32 millions. It was increased over a million by the shuffle in whiskey and other duties. A million dollars at least of the amount stated as revenue, properly belongs to the revenue of the present year.

Yet although that million is added to revenue, the deficit is $2,357,470.

Sir L. Tilley generally underatimated the expenditure largely. He never was willing to admit that, even when the revenue was shrinking, Tories would increase the expenditure. He estimated the expenditure at $30,611,639. The actual expenditure exceeded his estimate enormously in the one year. The Tories, who have "a hungry swarm" to satify, increased the expenditure $4,142,592 in one year.

The plea is set up that in the statement of expenditure is included $1,700,000 of the amount expended on account of the rebellion, and that this should not be charged to ordinary expenditure. The rebellion cost a great deal more than that, and one of its consequences will be a large permanent increase in North-west expenditure. For all that Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues are responsible. But exclusive of the rebellion expenditure there was an increase of $2,442,592, and exclusive of the rebellion expenditure there was, even according to the Government showing, a deficit of $657,470.

If to that we add the million dollars paid in advance on whiskey, etc., and the sums spent on the North-west lands and on the Intercolonial charged to capital account, the total deficit, exclusive of rebellion charges, will be found to be at least two millions.

Sir Leonard Tilley estimated a surplus of $1,383,361. He has instead a deficit of $2,357,470.

And although two millions additional taxation was imposed last session, the prospect is that the deficit will be much larger this year.

No wonder that Sir Leonard Tilley, although his health is said to be so much better, has retired from the position in which he made so many fine promises, and failed so lamentably.

A deficit of $2,357,470.—Globe.

Serious Accident.

Yesterday, a little before noon, while a young man, named Grey Harte, was engaged in painting the gable of the residence of Mr. John Alexander, corner Park and King streets, the scaffolding on which he stood collapsed, and he was thrown with great violence to the ground. He fell squarely on his back, and the shock inflicted severe internal injuries. He was unconscious, and demented with pain for a long time after, vomiting blood freely. Dr. Pigeon, who was passing at the time, took charge of the case, and the injured lad was removed to his boarding house, Mr. John Wolstenholme's, Aylmer street. Harte, who is about 20 years of age, is respectably connected in Midland, whence he came here, Mr. H. H. Cook, M.P.P., being his uncle.

The Smith Street Bridge Contract.

Councillor Menzies inquired at the council meeting alst night why the repairs of Smith street bridge had not been gone on with. No satisfactory answer was forthcoming, and it was proposed to take the contract from Mr. Thornton if he did not proceed with the work. This would probably be a relief to him, as he is said to have taken the contract too low. But provision should be made in the letting of contracts for some security that the contractor shall carry out his bargain, or failing to do so suffer a penalty. Certainly the town should have some assurrance that their work will be done promptly, and it is the duty of the council to see that some such provision is made in all contracts let by the municipality.

Town Council.

The New Exemption By-law Defeated After a Prodigal Expenditure of Gas —Dynamite Prohibited.

A meeting of the Town Council was held last evening, the Mayor in the chair and the following members in their seats: Messrs. Cahill, Davidson, Green, McClelland, Yelland, Douglas, Rutherford, Hartley, McNaughton, Kendry and Menzies.

After reading and confirmation of minutes the following

were read:—

From D. W. Dumble, stating that he had called the attention of the Clerk to the fact that the population of Peterborough being over 8,000, he was entitled to salary as Police Magistrate at the rate of $12,000 per annum and intended asking the Treasurer to make his quarterly cheque $900, and requesting the Council to consider the matter.—Finance Committee.

From John Wood, claiming two weeks' pay for injury received from a defective plank near the Salvation Army Barracks.—Finance Committee.

From P. J. McNamara, re drain on Park street.—Street Inspector to examine and report.

From R. Kingan and others, requesting Council to reconsider the report of the Committee on Fire, Water and Light, in reference to electric lights on Hunter street.—Finance Committee.

From George Taylor, asking remission of dog tax.—Finance Committee.

From M. Bolton, asking repairs to a drain.

Peterborough Gas Co	$ 22 65 / 20 15
Times Printing Co	12 48
Water Works	500 00
J. D. Baptie, Smallpox Hospital	140 00
George Stothem	47 73

The account of J. D. Baptie was ordered to be paid on being certified, the others were referred to the Finance Committee.

The Finance Committee reported, recommending payment of account of R. B. McKee, $56.10.—Carried.

Councillor Rutherford moved the first reading of the by-law restricting the transport and storing of dynamite in the town of Peterborough. After the first reading the Council went into committee and the by-law was given its second and third readings, and finally passed.

Councillor Davidson moved the first reading of by-law 501, authorizing the laying of a switch on Bethune street, near the Stove Works. The council went into committee, and the by-law was read for the second and third time and carried.

THE DICKSON BY-LAW.

Councillor Cahill moved the third reading of the new by-law, exempting a portion of the Dickson estate from taxation.

Councillor McClelland moved, seconded by Councillor Douglas, in amendment, that clause 2 of the by-law be altered to read as follows:—"Such other buildings as may be erected by the same company, or any other company, within the town of Peterborough, to be used as a manufacturing establishment, and the machinery to be used in connection therewith, shall, upon application to the council of the town of Peterborough for their consideration and approval, be exempted from taxation for a period of ten years from the date of the passing of such by-law."

After some little discussion Mr. McClelland moved that the council go into committee of the whole to re-consider the by-law, with a view to making the amendment.

Mr. Cahill held that nothing would be gained by that course, if the council signified a willingness to go into committee on the matter, it indicated their willingness to accept the amendment; he was for taking a straight vote.

Mr. McClelland's motion carried, and Councillor Menzies took the chair.

The by-law was then read by the clerk. Clause one was carried without objection, but when clause 2 was reached, Mr. McClelland explained that it was here his amendment came in.

DEBATING THE QUESTION.

Mr. Rutherford thought if Mr. McClelland was sincere in his desire to encourage new industries he would not have worded his amendment so as to compel those engaging in them to come to the Council year after year. He understood that if the by-law were passed the Dickson Company would proceed with buildings, but if it were not a great deal of capital would be kept locked up that would otherwise be put in circulation; he did not believe that $250,000 would have been spent in buildings during the past year if it had not been for the incoming of new industries, and if this by-law were not passed there would be a falling off next year, and many houses would be without tenants. He was satisfied that more money was being spent on the Dickson raceway than on any other property in this town. He trusted the Council would pass the by-law in such form as to give the exemption for ten years.

Mr. McClelland disclaimed any desire to cause any obstruction, he was as proud to see new industries coming in as Mr. Rutherford, he only stipulated that the incoming Council should have the right to do as they pleased in regard to industries that might arise in their term of office; the present Council had no right to exempt buildings that did not exist.

Councillor Douglas maintained the same opinion.

The Mayor said that the amendment would simply render the by-law of no avail, as it conferred no privileges, but the right to ask for exemption, which anyone could do if there were no by-law at all.

He was at present in communication with three establishments who were seeking a field of operations. The building now being put up by the Dickson estate had what space was required by one of these concerns, and if that industry came here, it would be simply because that building was there ready for them. He thought this showed that it was in the interest of the town to allow the company to go on and erect as many buildings as they pleased.

Councillor Hartley held that

NOTHING WAS GAINED

by the amendment, which made the by-law merely one granting permission to ask for certain privileges. It would be more rational for Mr. McClelland to have opposed the whole by-law.

Councillor McNaughton was opposed to the whole principle of the thing; he was willing to grant exemption to anything that was first. He thought the Council was already treating the Dickson Company very liberally in exempting for ten years the building now erected, without any restriction.

Councillor Kendry said if the Council wanted to encourage new industries, they must show their willingness to guarantee them that they should be exempt. The Dickson Company's was the most highly assessed property in the town; he had no interest in the matter, but that of the town. Whatever industry came in here was a benefit to the town. If buildings were standing ready for occupation, firms that had been burnt out in other places would be induced to come here. For his part he would not be afraid to see a bigger woollen mill than his come here. It didn't make any difference whether the opposition was here or somewhere else.

Mr. Cahill, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, moved in amendment to the amendment, that the following be added to clause 2:—"Or any other buildings that may be hereafter erected by any other company or individuals in the town of Peterborough for manufacturing purposes."

Mr. McClelland maintained that the Council had no right to take the power from the Council of next year to deal with industries that might arise during their administration.

The Mayor again pointed out that Mr. McClelland's motion gave no privilege to any one more than they already had.

Mr. Rutherford pointed out that if the new by-law were not passed, the old one would remain in force.

WHICH WAS CERTAINLY WORSE,

Mr. Cahill at this stage withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Councillor Yelland did not think the new by-law was any better than the old, indeed he thought it was worse. He objected to exempting any building until he knew what it was to be used for. He did not think it right to exempt anything and everything that came along.

Mr. McNaughton inquired of the Mayor if it was the intention of the Dickson company to erect other buildings during the incumbency of the present council.

The Mayor thought if Mr. McNaughton and other opponents of of the by-law would take a walk along the raceway and see the preparations being made, they would vote for the by-law.

On the question being put, Mr. McClelland's amendment was lost, Messrs. Cahill, Davidson, Rutherford, Kendry, Hartley and the Mayor voting against it.

The original motion was then put and lost by a vote of six to six, Messrs. Cahill, Davidson, Rutherford, Kendry, Hartley and the Mayor voting yea, and Messrs. McNaughton, Green, Yelland, Douglass, McClelland and Menzies, nay.

Councillor Rutherford moved the first reading of a by-law for the better regulation of hawkers and peddlers.

The Council went into committee on motion of Mr. Rutherford and the by-law was put through its various stages and passed.

Councillor Menzies enquired what had been done in regard to Smith street bridge.

Mr. Cahill explained that the contractor having asked an additional $100 to go on with the contract the Street and Bridge Committee had granted him $50. and had notified him to that effect, yet nothing had been done.

The opinion was expressed that if Mr. Thornton did not go on with the work he should lose his contract.

After some further discussion the council adjourned for two weeks.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL SCHEME.

If any community has ever been fooled "to the top of its bent," it is the residents of the Midland District who have foolishly believed the government sincere in its professions of willingness to build the Trent Valley Canal. Three years and a half have passed since Sir Charles Tupper, on an electioneering tour went over the route, and made specific promises in the name of the government. Yet, not one of the fragmentary patches—frivolous fractions of the grand whole—has been completed. Going to work in the wrong way—beginning in the middle, like some lunatic commencing to build a house, by putting up the chimneys first—they have accomplished comparatively nothing. Except in this respect. They have made political capital out of it from the first, and now there is evidence of another political job being hatched. The Burleigh Falls contract is a case in point. Ever since Mr. Goodwin signed the contract, he has had to contend, not only against the natural difficulties of the work, but against the obstruction of the Government Engineer. The plans, even, are not yet ready. The contractor has been seriously hampered by this wretched neglect. What plans he has succeeded in getting out of the Department have been supplied in part only, a piece at a time. The plans were supposed to have been ready years ago, yet it is found after so much promising, after loud protestations of interest in the work, that they are not half ready and can only be worried out of the department in crude fragments. Any practical man will understand at what disadvantage a contractor must work, under such circumstances, and at what additional expense he must be put in not being able to make one final arrangement for procuring materials. The result will probably be that the cost of the work to the contractor will be in excess of the amount of his tender. To still further harrass the contractor, a building inspector has been, on Dr. Bergin's nomination, exported from Cornwall. The chief object for which an outsider has been selected, is, it seems, because no local man could be found to undertake the task of nagging the contractor, and of making it so uncomfortable and vexatious for him that, in the opinion of those who should know, he will be driven to throw up the contract. The object in thus squeezing out the contractor is said to be that a syndicate of local Tories, for whom no other means of reward for party services, past and prospective, can be found, may get their fingers in the pie, and make something handsome out of a big bill of extras, or re-measurement a la Section B contract. At the present rate the work on this section of the T. V. C. is progressing, the present century will die a natural death before it is completed, and some portions of the work will be decayed before the remainder is finished. For instance, one of the shore piers of the bridge across the Chute is of stone and its fellow is to be of wood. Why this is done "no fellah" except a Dominion Government engineer "can understand." It is only a sample illustration of the insolent indifference that marks the attitude of the Government towards this important work. In its dealing with this matter, the Government has not given a single instance of its bona fides in prosecuting it. While it can be turned to political advantage, it will be so used, no matter what public interests suffer. As an adjunct to the C. P. R., by giving uninterrupted water communication from Port Arthur to the seaboard, it is of national importance; yet millions upon millions are lavished on the C. P. R. Syndicate, while a petty half million is devoted to this important complement to a transcontinental system of transport. While the subject is in hand, it might not be amiss to inquire why our local representatives consent to Dr. Bergin sending an inspector of construction from Cornwall, when there are scores of local men more competent for the position and, as far as party services are concerned, much more deserving of it. The people of these two ridings look to their representatives to see that their interests in the Trent Valley Canal matter are not overlooked, but their allowing an obtrusive outsider to displace their own supporters in a lucrative position, does not look as though they were doing their full duty.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Bradstreets says that we must have a cold snap to put any new snap into business.

Sir Leonard Tilley is retiring from the Cabinet because he is sick—of failing financially.

Years ago Sir John prayed with much impious unction, "Would to God I could catch Riel," and in the light of recent events it would seem that the prayer has been answered, although it looks as though the chieftain were badly caught himself.

Mr. Gladstone, in his contribution to the book, "Why I am a Liberal," defines the principles of Liberalism to be a trust in the people, qualified by prudence, and the principle of Toryism to be a mistrust of the people, qualified by fear.

The Parnellites will gain little by such intolerance in their treatment of opponents. Mr. Wm. Hastings, proprietor of the Irish Citizen, a loyalist newspaper, has been threatened with death, and his residence has been [illegible] the Parnellites. A club may be a crushing argument, but hardly a convincing one. —

The pilot who deserts his ship when th storm is driving her on a lee shore is a coward. Sir Leonard Tilley is deserting the Canadian ship of state just as she is bumping on a rock of deficit of nearly two and a quarter millions. If Sir Leonard were a patriot, and the great financial colossus his admirers, dlubbed him, he would reason that now was the chance for him to show how vastly superior he was to every living financier.

There's money in gas, if one may judge of the profits made by the Consumers' Gas Company, of Toronto. That enlightening corporation, at its last annual meeting, declared a dividend of seventeen per cent. In addition to this the stock is liberally watered and therefore shareholders have a very good thing. There is a deal of rottenness and jobbery in connection with Toronto's municipal matters. In respect to waste and extravagant expenditure, her rulers are infringing on the copyright of the Dominion Government.

It is perhaps a good thing the new postoffice in Peterborough has hung off so long, else we might have a catastrophe to chronicle similar to that in Galt. A part of the new postoffice for some time in course of construction in that town tumbled down. It appears that similar expedients for rewarding political supporters have been adopted in Galt as have been practised in Peterborough. The tumble in Galt took place under the very nose of the building inspector. And who, might one suppose, did the Government place in this responsible position? None other than the editor of the local Tory paper, who knew no more about building and bricklaying than a nursery-governess. Of course, under the supervision of ignorance, one need not wonder that the building fell. The result of the fall will, of course, involve a large additional expense. This might have been avoided if a competent man had been appointed as inspector; but this would not suit the policy of the Dominion Government, whose aim is to reward political hirelings, no matter how much the public interests may suffer.

The Tory journals called the action of the Opposition towards the Franchise Bill factious opposition. Yet their opposition forced the Government to elimimate the more iniquitous features of the measure. As originally introduced, and as explained by Sir John, himself, the Indians in the North-west, including Poundmaker and Big Bear, were to have votes. The wisdom of the Opposition in striving, and their good fortune in succeeding, to have this provision wiped out, is made apparent in the light of a promise made at Qu'Appelle by Hon. Thos. White. The Minister of the Interior saw that a bill would be introduced next session to give the people of the territories representation in the Dominion Parliament. If it had not been for the persistence of the Opposition last session, the roving, marauding Indian bands, including Poundmaker and Big Bear, would have been placed on an equality with civilized white man. The more the changes forced in the original iniquity, the first draft of the Franchise Bill, are considered, the more will the patriotic persistence of Her Majesty's loyal opposition be appreciated.

Greeley's Generosity.

A new story is told of Horace Greeley. One night he was walking home with a friend named Sanderson. It was cold and raw and windy. As they struggled along they were accosted by a man who wanted "a little assistance," "the price of a night's lodging," or something of that sort. "No," said Greeley, in [illegible] peculiar treble; "no, you're lying; you want some money for whisky. I won't give it to you." The man pleaded for it again. "No," said Greeley, "no. You're a fraud; you can't have it;" and then they pushed on, leaving him standing under a gaslamp's light, the very embodiment of woe. As they turned away Greeley said to Sanderson, "That was the right way to deal with the fellow, wasn't it?" "Yes," said Sanderson, "of course it was." But Greeley was not satisfied. Before they had gone half a block he turned round with, "I wonder whether the fellow's still there?" He was. Greeley walked back part way, and called him. The fellow came. "There," said Greeley, "I guess you're a fraud, but take that," thrusting a bill into his hand. The fellow was profuse in his thanks. Greeley stopped them and returned to his companion. "You didn't give that fellow anything?" demanded Sanderson. "Yes," said Greeley, "I did. I was just darned fool enough to give him a $2-bill."

The Lord's Razor.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Sunday Morning, Oct. 11, 1885.

"In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the King of Assyria."—ISAIAH vii., 20.

The Bible is the oldest book ever written. There are no similitudes in Ossian or the Iliad or the Odyssey so daring. Its imagery sometimes seems on the verge of the reckless, but only seems so. The fact is that God would startle and arouse and propel men and nations. A tame and limping similitude would fail to accomplish the object. While there are times when He employs in the Bible the gentle dew and the morning cloud and the dove and the daybreak in the presentation of truth, we often find the iron chariot, the lightning, the earthquake, the spray, the sword, and, in my text, the razor.

This keen-bladed instrument has advanced in usefulness with the ages. In Bible times and lands the beard remained uncut save in the seasons of mourning and humiliation, but the razor was always

A SUGGESTIVE SYMBOL.

David says of Doeg, his antagonist: "Thy tongue is a sharp razor working deceitfully;" that is, it pretends to clear the face, but is really used for deadly incision. In this morning's text this weapon of the toilet appears under the following circumstances: Judea needed to have some of its prosperities cut off, and God sends against it three Assyrian kings—first Sennacherib, then Esarhaddon, and afterward Nebuchadnezzar. These three sharp invasions, that cut down the glory of Judea, are compared to so many sweeps of the razor across the face of the land. And these circumstances were called a hired razor, because God took the kings of Assyria, with whom he had no sympathy, to do the work, and paid them in palaces and spoils and annexations. These kings were hired to execute the divine behests. And now the text, which on its first reading may have seemed trivial or inapt, is charged with momentous import: "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired—namely, by them beyond the river, by the King of Assyria."

NOT A TOY.

Well, if God's judgments are razors, we had better be careful how we use them on other people. In careful sheath these domestic weapons are put away, where no one by accident may touch them, and where the hands of children may not reach them. Such instruments must be carefully handled or not handled at all. But how recklessly some people wield the judgments of God! If a man meet with business misfortune, how many there are ready to cry out: "That is a judgment of God upon him because he was unscrupulous, or arrogant, or over-reaching, or miserly. I thought he would get cut down! What a clean sweep of everything! His city house and country house gone. His stables emptied of all the fine bays and sorrels and grays that used to prance by his door. All his resources overthrown, and all that he prided himself on tumbled into demolition. Good for him!" Stop, my brother. Don't sling around too freely the judgments of God, for they are razors.

DISASTER NOT PUNISHMENT.

Some of the most wicked business men succeed, and they live and die in prosperity and some of the most honest and conscientious are driven into bankruptcy. Perhaps his manner was unfortunate, and he was not really as proud as he looked to be. Some of those who carry their head erect and look imperial are humble as a child, while many a man in seedy coat and slouch hat and unblacked shoes is as proud as Lucifer. You cannot tell by a man's look. Perhaps he was not unscrupulous in business, for there are two sides to every story, and everybody that accomplishes anything for himself or others gets industriously lied about. Perhaps his business misfortune was not a punishment, but the fatherly discipline to prepare him for heaven, and God may love him far more than He loves you, who can pay dollar for dollar, and are put down in the commercial catalogues as A 1. Whom the Lord loveth He gives four hundred thousand dollars and lets die on embroidered pillows? No; whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth. Better keep your hand off the Lord's razors, lest they cut and wound people that do not deserve it. If you want to shave off some of the bristling pride of your own heart, do so; but be very careful how you put the sharp edge on others.

How I do dislike the behaviour of those persons who, when people are unfortunate, say: "I told you so—getting punished—served him right." If those I-told-you-so's got their desert they would long ago have been pitched over the battlements. The mote in their neighbor's eyes, so small that it takes a microscope to find it, gives them more trouble than the beam which obscures their own optics. With air sometimes supercilious and sometimes Pharisaical, and always blasphemous, they take the razor of divine judgment and sharpen it on the hone of their own hard hearts, and then go to work on men sprawled out at full length under disaster, cutting mercilessly. They begin by soft expressions of sympathy and pity and half praise, and lather the victim all over before they put on the sharp edge.

A CAPTIVE KING.

Let us be careful how we shoot at others lest we take down the wrong one, remembering the servant of King Willam Rufus who shot a deer, but the arrow glanced against a tree and killed the king. Instead of going out with shafts to pierce, and razors to cut, we had better imitate the friend of Richard Coeur de Lion, who, in the war of the Crusades, was captured and imprisoned, but none of his friends knew where. So his loyal friend went around the land from stronghold to stronghold, and sang at each window a snatch of song that Richard Coeur de Lion had taught him in other days. And one day coming before a jail where he suspected his king might be incarcerated, he sang two lines of song, and immediately King Richard responded from his cell with the other two lines, and so his whereabouts were discovered, and immediately a successful movement was made for his liberation. So let us go up and down the world with the music of kind words and sympathetic hearts, serenading the unfortunate, and trying to get out of trouble men who had noble natures, but by unforeseen circumstances have been incarcerated, thus liberating kings. More hymn-book and less razor.

TO THE FAULTY.

Especially ought we to be apologetic and merciful toward those who, while they have great faults, have also great virtues. Some people are barren of virtues. No weeds verily, but no flowers. I must not be too much enraged at a nettle along the fence if it be in a field containing forty acres of ripe Michigan wheat. At the present time naturalists tell us there is on the sun a spot twenty thousand miles long, but from the brightness and warmth I conclude it is a good deal of a sun yet.

A PRECISE IMPLEMENT.

Again, when I read in my text that the Lord shaves with the hired razor of Assyria the land of Judea, I bethink myself of the precision of God's providence. A razor swung the tenth part of an inch out of the right line means either failure or laceration, but God's dealings never slip, and they do not miss, by the thousandth part of an inch, the right direction. People talk as though things in this world were at loose ends. Cholera sweeps across Marseilles and Madrid and Palermo, and we watch anxiously. Will the epidemic sweep Europe and America? People say, "That will entirely depend on whether the inoculation is a successful experiment; that will depend entirely on quarantine regulations; that will depend on the early or late appearance of frost; that epidemic is pitched into the world, and it goes blundering across the continents, and it is all guess-work and an appalling perhaps."

My friends, I think, perhaps, that God had something to do with it, and that His mercy may have in some way protected us, that He may have done as much for us as the quarantine and the health officers. It was right and a necessary that all caution should be used, but there has come enough maccaroni from Italy, and enough grapes from the South of France, and enough rags from tatterdemalions, and hidden in these articles of transportation enough choleraic germs to have left by this time all Brooklyn mourning at Greenwood, and all Philadelphia at Laurel Hill, and all Boston at Auburn. I thank all the doctors and quarantines, but more than all, and first of all, and last of all, and all the time, I thank God. In all the six thousand years of the world's existence there has not one thing merely "happened so." God is not an anarchist, but a King, a Father.

TODD LINCOLN.

When little Todd, the son of President Lincoln, died, all the land sympathized with the sorrow in the White House. He used to rush into the room where the Cabinet was in session, and while the most eminent men of the land were discussing the questions of national existence. But the child had no care about those questions. Now God the Father, and God the son, and God the Holy Ghost are in perpetual session in regard to this world and kindred worlds. Shall you, His child rush in to criticise or arraign or condemn the divine government? No; the Cabinet of the Eternal Three can govern and will govern in the wisest and best way, and there never will be a mistake, and like razor skilfully swung, shall cut that which ought to be cut, and avoid that which ought to be avoided. Precision to the very hairbreadth. Earthly time-pieces may get out of order and strike wrong, saying it is one o'clock when it is two, or two when it is three. God's clock is always right and when it is one it strickes one, and when it is twelve it strikes twelve, and the second hand is as accurate as the minute hand.

THE RAZOR OF WAR.

Further, my text tells us that God sometimes shaves nations: "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired." With one sharp sweep He went across Judah and down went its pride and its power. In 1861 God shaved our nation. We had allowed to grow Sabbath desecration, and oppression, and blasphemy, and fraud, and impurity, and all sorts of turpitude. The South had its sins, and the North had its sins, and the East its sins, and the West its sins. We had been warned again and again, and we did not heed. At length the sword of war cut from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf, and from Atlantic seaboard to Pacific seaboard. The pride of the land, not the cowards, but the heroes, on both sides went down. And that which we took for the sword of war was the Lord's razor.

In 1862, again, it went across the land. In 1864 again. Then the sharp instrument was civil combat, and, my brethern, if we do not quit some of our individual and national sins, the Lord will again take us in hand. He has other razors within reach besides war; epidemics, droughts, deluges, plagues—grasshopper and locust—or our overtowering success may so far excite the jealousy of other lands that, under some pretext, the great nations of Europe and Asia may combine to put us down. This nation, so easily approached on north and south and from both oceans, might have on hand at once more hostilities than were ever arrayed against any one power.

We have recently been told by skilful engineers that all our fortresses around New York harbor could not keep the shells from being hurled from the sea into the heart of these great cities. Insulted China, the wealthiest of all nations, as will be realized when her resources are developed, will have adopted all the modes of modern warfare, and at the Golden Gate may be discussing whether Americans must go. If the combined jealousies of Europe and Asia should come upon us, we should have more work on hand than would be pleasant. I hope no such comination against us will ever be formed, but I want to show that, as Assyria was the hired razor against Judah, and Cyrus the hired razor against Babylon, and the Huns the hired razor against the Goths, there are now many razors that the Lord could hire if, because of our national sins, He should undertake to shave us. In 1870, Germany was the razor with which the Lord shaved France. England is the razor with which very shortly the Lord will shave Russia. But nations are to repent in a day. May a speedy and world-wide coming to God hinder on both sides the sea, all national calamity. But do not let us, as a nation, either by unrighteous law at Washington, or bad lives among ourselves, defy the Almighty,

THE RAZOR OF ANCIENT ROME.

One would think that our national symbol of the eagle might sometimes suggest another eagle, that which ancient Rome carried. In the talons of that eagle were clutched at one time Britain, France, Spain, Dalmatia, Rhaetia, Noricum, Pannonia, Moesia, Dacia, Thrace, Macedonia, Greece, Asia Minor, Syria, Phœnicia, Palestine, Egypt, and all Northern Africa, and all the islands of the Mediterranean, indeed, all the world that was worth having, an hundred and twenty millions of people under the wings of that one eagle. Where is she now? Ask Gibbon, the historian, in his prose poem the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." Ask her gigantic ruins struggling their sadness through the ages, the screech owl at windows out of which world-wide conquerors looked. Ask the day of judgment when her crowned debauchees, Commodus and Pertinax, and Caligula and Diocletian, shall answer for their infamy? As men and as nations let us repent, and have our trust in a pardoning God, rather than depend on former success for immunity! Out of thirteen greatest battles of the world, Napoleon had lost but one before Waterloo. Pride and destruction often ride in the same saddle.

THE THIRD WEAPON.

But notice once more, and more than all in my text, that God is so kind and loving that when it is necessary for Him to cut, He has to go to others for the sharp-edged weapon. "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired." God is love. God is pity. God is help. God is shelter. God is rescue. There are no sharp edges about Him, no thrusting points, no instruments of laceration. If you want balm for wounds, He has that. If you want salve for divine eyesight, a razor that is hired." God is love. God is He has that. But if there is sharp and cutting work to do which requires a razor, that He hires. God has nothing about Him that hurts, save when dire necessity demands, and then he has to go clear off to some one else to get the instrument.

This divine geniality will be no novelty to those who have pondered the Calvarean massacre, where God submerged Himself in human tears, and crimsoned Himself from punctured arteries, and let the terrestrial and infernal worlds maul Him until the chandeliers of the sky had to be turned out because the universe could not endure the indecency. Illustrious for love He must have been to take all that as our substitute, paying out of His own heart the price of our admission at the gates of heaven.

King Henry II., of England, crowned his son as a king, and on the day of coronation put on a servant's garb and waited, he, the king, at the son's table, to the astonishment of all the princes. But we know of more wondrous scene, the King of heaven and earth offering to put on you, His child, the crown of life, and in the form of a servant waiting on you with blessing. Extol that love, all painting, all sculpture, all music, all architecture, all worship! In Dresdenian gallery let Raphael hold Him up as a child, and in Antwerp Cathedral let Rubens hand Him down from the cross as a martyr, and Handel make all his oratorio vibrate around that one chord—"He was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquity." But not until all the redeemed get home, and from the countenance of all the piled-up galleries of the ransomed shall be revealed the wonders of redemption, shall either man or seraph or archangel know the height, and depth, and length, and breadth of the love of God.

AN UNFINISHED MONUMENT.

At our national capital, a monument in honor of him who did more than any one to achieve our American independence, was for scores of years in building, and most of us were discouraged and said it never would be completed. And how glad we all were when in the presence of the highest officials of the nation, the work was done! But will the monument to Him who died for the eternal liberation of the human race ever be completed? For ages the work has been going up; evangelists and apostles and martyrs have been adding to the heavenly pile, and every one of the millions of the redeemed going up from earth, has made to it contribution of gladness, and weight of glory is swung to the top of other weight of glory, higher and higher as the centuries go by, higher and higher as the whole millenniums roll, sapphire on the top of jasper, sardonyx on the top of chalcedony, and chrysoprasus above topaz, until, far beneath shall be the walls and towers and domes of the great capital, a monument forever and forever rising, and yet never done. "Unto him who hath loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and made us kings and priests forever." Allelujah, amen.

"I was in Marion county the other day," said a lawyer to a reporter, "and heard of the death of an old man I had known there, and it recalled a peculiar case of retributive justice in that family.

"Years ago the old man owned one of the best farms in the country, and his son assisted him in working it. The son married and had a son. When the grandson was about fifteen years of age his father suggested to the grandfather that as he was growing old and had worked hard all his life, he take things easy and rest the remainder of his days. He asked the old man to deed the farm to him and let him take sole charge of it, with the aid of the grandson. He promised the old farmer a good home and an easy life as long as he lived. The old man finally deeded the property to his son.

"No sooner had he obtained the title to the property than the son began a system of the most heartless treatment of his father. He compelled him to work harder than he had ever done for himself, would not let him eat at the family table, and subjected him to all kinds of persecutions. The grandson protested in vain against this treatment of his grandfather and finally the old man left the home that he had made and found an asylum in the county poor house.

"After awhile the son got badly in debt, and so anxious was he to escape payment of his obligations that he made a deed of the farm to his son. Everything moved smoothly for a time, until one day the farmer gave some instructions that did not agree with his son's ideas and the latter refused to consent to them. The father declared that his wishes should be carried out, and ordered his son to leave the place. The son, however, reminded him that he held the title to the farm himself, and that as they could not get along together, the father would have to go, and he did.

"After the departure of the father, the son re-established his grandfather in possession of the farm, deeding back everything. The old man, however, gave the farm absolutely to his grandson, who provided amply for the old man until he died. The boy's father was offered a home on the old place, but refused to accept anything but the title to it all, and the last heard of him he was working as a farm hand in Wabash township, this county."—*Lafayette (Ind.) NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Wild To-Night.

To-night Dr. Wild, the Bond street seer, will deliver his celebrated lecture, "A Masonic Mystery," in Bradburn's Opera House. The few seats left untaken may be secured at Davis & Co's bookstore.

The Canadian All Rail Route.

On and after Monday, Nov. 2nd, the trains of the C. P. R. will run through from eastern Canada to Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains via the North shore of Lake Superior, making a continuous all rail trip, and will be run through to Winnipeg without change of cars. This will be a great convenience now that the close of navigation is approaching.

Sabbath School Teachers' Association.

The regular meeting of this association will be held on Monday evening next, Nov. 2nd, in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. Rev. E. Duff will read an essay on "How to encourage a missionary spirit among the scholars," which will be followed by an open discussion on the same subject. It is hoped that all teachers and officers of the various Sabbath schools will endeavor to be present.

Thanks.

The committee of the Peterborough Protestant Home beg to acknowledge their deep gratitude to the choirs, amateurs, orchestra of the Fire Brigade Band, Mr. Heathfield, Professor Parker, Mrs. Chambers, "the press," Mr. Bradburn, who gave the hall free of expense, and Mrs. Robert Denniston, for the great trouble she took in getting up the concert. The proceeds amounted to $65. The committee also beg to express their gratitude to the Orangemen of Lakefield for their donation of $7.00. J. G. Hall, secretary.

The Nicholls Hospital.

A meeting was held last evening at the office of Messrs. Poussette & Roger, of the committee of the Nicholls Hospital Trust and members of the medical profession, for the purpose of framing regulations for the governance of the institution. So much progress was effected that provision was made for the admission of a patient to-day. A full meeting of the board will be held to-morrow evening for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee. The regulations will then be confirmed and made public.

A New Methodist Church at Havelock.

On the 27th inst., the Rev. I. Tovell visited Havelock and conducted the ceremonies connected with the laying of the corner stone of a new church. After the stone was laid the people assembled in the school house near by, where suitable addresses were delivered by Revs. Mr. Tovell and Puffer, and afterwards a sumptuous tea was enjoyed, prepared by the ladies of the neighborhood. A new church is needed at Havelock, and the prospect of having one at an early date is gratifying to all concerned.

"Kerry Gow."

Bradburn's Opera House was packed last night with an audience expecting a great treat from the presentation of the "Kerry Gow" by the Joe Murphy Kerry Gow Company, and they were not disappointed, for from the rise of the curtain till the horses came under the string in "the race" the hall was one hum of approval, almost momentarily varied with little earthquakes of applause and eruptions of laughter. Mr. J. S. Murphy, as "Dan O'Hara," was a coat in himself; his capital acting, clever songs and brilliant interpretation of the character evoking loud applause and laughter, while a good support developed in a most entertaining manner the sparkling store of wit which the play contains. All the characters did themselves credit, not forgetting "Ned," the star of White's livery stables, who made his debut in the smithy scene. The entire play was excellently put on and the smooth manner in which it ran added to the realism of the stirring situations with which it abounds. Everybody was delighted, and it is safe to say that a better pleased audience never filed out of the Opera House on the fall of the curtain. This company will present "The Shaughraun" on Thursday evening. Secure your seats at Hartley's, Hunter street.

The Cure of the Sick.

All ladies interested in this subject are invited to meet at St. John's school house on Wednesday, Nov. 4th, 1885, at 8 o'clock p. m., when a lecture will be given on nursing by Miss Caroline Peck, graduate of the New York Training School for Nurses, attached to Bellevue Hospital. Admission, 15 cents. Doors open at 7.30 p.m.

I WAS AFFLICTED WITH GOUTY and Chalk deposits around my joints, enlarged and inflamed; could not walk; pain was intense, particularly at the change in the weather; was confined to my bed; gave up all hopes of living; used Gilks' Iodide Ammonia Liniment and Pills, which remedies restored my health, dispersed the enlargement and removed the pain. Mrs. Virginia E. Bradshaw, Stafford Store, Va. Sold by John McKee. d128eod-w44

The Danger Over.

All apprehension in regard to smallpox is now at an end. The Martin family are all isolated at the locks and their late residence has been thoroughly disinfected. The child on whom the disease made its appearance is and there are no symptoms of the disease among the other members of the family. Peterborough may therefore be said to be quite free from smallpox.

Murray Street Baptist Church.

An entertainment, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, readings, etc., in aid of the funds of the Sunday School, is arranged to take place in the Sunday School room, Murray street, on Friday evening next at 8 o'clock. Rev. A. H. Munro, Misses Ellsworth, Gilmore, Huston, Minore, Stratton and Yelland, Messrs. Coleman, Duff, Eastwood, Matthews and others will take part, and an enjoyable evening may be anticipated.

Farmers, Attention!

The directors of the Central Exhibition request all farmers, who are willing, to attend with teams and scrapers at the exhibition grounds on Thursday, November 5th, for the purpose of assisting in levelling and grading the grounds, and if the 5th should prove wet or stormy, they are requested to attend the following day. It is to be hoped that all who have the interests of the Society at heart will lend their assistance. A day's work to the farmer, with his team, will be comparatively nothing, while the aggregate benefit to be derived from the co-operation of a score or two, will be great, and will greatly relieve the funds of the Society. A big "bee" is expected on November 5th.

Vice-Regal Patronage.

"Mr. Streatfield presents his compliments to Mrs. T. Charles Watson, and is desired by their Excellencies, the Governor-General and the Marchioness of Lansdowne, to say that it will give them great pleasure to extend their patronage to the readings to be given by Mrs. Watson through Ontario." Mrs. Watson will appear in Bradburn's Opera House on Tuesday, Nov. 3rd, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., who are to be commended for having made arrangements to bring the leading elocutionists in Scotland and America, to our town during the coming season. Mrs. Watson is referred to by the press of Canada and the States as the rival of Mrs. Scott Siddons. Reserved seats may be secured at Hartley's music store.

What We May Expect.

A large turn out of Masons to hear Dr. Wild this evening.

The Shaughraun to-morrow evening.

Mrs. T. C. Watson to give readings here on Nov. 3rd.

Peddlers to execrate the Town Council for increasing the license fees.

The Nicholls hospital to be in full working order before many days.

The exemption question to get a rest.

Trains of the C. P. R. to run through to Winnipeg without change after November 2nd.

Fresh to strong east and north winds, partly cloudy weather with light rain in the south-western portion; slightly cooler.

What They are Saying.

We swamped the new Dickson By-lay.—One half the Council.

But the old one stands on the book.—The other half.

We're sick of hearing about it.—The public.

No more dynamite.—Councillor Menzies.

We'll prohibit peddlers. — Councillor Rutherford.

Yes, for they leave my gate open.—Councillor McNaughton.

If Thornton don't hurry up with that Smith Street Bridge contract, we'll have to take it off his hands.—The Street and Bridge Committee.

Which would just suit me. -The contractor.

We'll put aside one per cent of the interest on our stakes to form a sinking fund; this will pay off the principal by the time the post office is built.—The betters on the post-office site.

We Would Like to Know.

Why Peterborough has no Board of Trade.

And who will be the first to make a practical move towards organizing one.

If it's true that residents of Hunter street are subscribing to a fund for building a cantilever bridge over St John's creek.

Why a penalty for non-performance was not attached to Contractor Thornton's Smith street bridge contract.

And if it is the custom to leave the town at a contractor's mercy.

If the English Tories who rotten egged Lord Lorne took their cue from the Canadian Tories, who gave Lord Elgin, another Canadian Governor-General, a similar reception.

What was the use of the council debating the Dickson by-law for two hours last night.

And if the arguments used convinced any one.

A Street Gossip.

"Oh! Mary dear, did you see what a lovely new winter costume that young Mrs. Rattleford has got," said one young lady to another on George street the other afternoon, "I can't imagine how she manages to dress so well; you know they haven't been married very long and her husband is only a junior clerk on $500 a year—it beats me to know how she manages it."

"Yes," said her companion, "its a mystery, you know; but some people say her husband wins lots of money at cards, and I have heard it hinted that it would be just as well if his employers looked after him sharply, for he and his wife put on altogether too much style."

And so these two thoughtless girls, just because a young woman, of whom they were a little jealous, had a prettier and more expensive dress than they could afford, went to work to pick her and her husband all to pieces.

It strangely happened that the lady of whom they were speaking was just behind them on the street and heard every mean word they said, and ranging up alongside them remarked: "As you young ladies seem so very much interested in my new dress, I'll tell you just how I got it, and in future I hope you will learn to mind your own business. You see, when John and I got married he gave me $300 to buy furniture with, but I got all we wanted so cheap at Belleghem's, on Hunter street, that I had $50 to spare, and John told me to get myself a new dress with it, and I'm very glad you admire my taste. Good evening, ladies."

The gossipy girls made up their minds that when their lovers came to time, they, too, would save money by buying their furniture at Belleghem's.

In order to make room for Xmas stock, now coming in, Sailsbury Bros. are offering bargains—20 to 30 per cent discount.

A Masonic Miracle.

The Secrets of the Great Pyramid of Ghizeh—Shem the First Master Mason.

Rev. Dr. Wild, pastor of Bond street Congregational Church, Toronto, lectured last evening under the auspices of the Masonic brotherhood, to a large audience, in Bradburn's Hall. The chair was taken by Rev. V. Clementi, who introduced the lecturer in fitting terms. Dr. Wild, after a few preliminary remarks, expressed his pleasure at again confronting a Peterboro' audience, gave a short explanation of what Masonry is, describing it as a system of philosophy calculated to bring out the finer parts of a man's nature. Masons were taught to labor for permanency and truth. Although their objects were charitable, they were so more in a preventive than in a remedial sense. They cultivated the capability in a man of taking care of himself, and it was rare in the craft to meet any man who was in difficulties through any fault of his own. But where, from causes beyond a man's own control, he was in trouble they helped him. The orphan and the widow were also their special care. Masonry was not atheism; they acknowledged God and made the Bible the foundation of all their work. He then went on with his lecture on "A Masonic Miracle," the miracle being the Pyramid Ghizeh, which he said he believed to have been built by Shem, the first master Mason. The lecture was illustrated by a sectional drawing of the pyramid, to which frequent reference was made, and his argument was, that in this pyramid were locked up secrets that gave the key to all mechanical problems, and many scientific and astronomical subjects. He believed that before the flood people were as far advanced in civilization as at the present day, and that this great pyramid had been built by Shem under Divine inspiration, for the purpose of bequeathing to the world the knowledge possessed by the antediluvians. The lecture, which was enlivened by frequent flashes of the humor characteristic of Dr. Wild, was well received by the audience.

The Genesta Arrives Home.

PORTSMOUTH, Eng., Oct. 28.—The yacht Genesta arrived from New York this morning. She came into port flying the three first prize flags won in her contests with the American yachts. The greatest enthusiasm was manifested by the crews on board the men-of-war and yachts in the harbor, and cheer after cheer greeted her as she sailed in.

Ireland Under Tory Rule.

No Rent Paid and Boycotting Almost Universal.

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 28.—Lord Salisbury and Lord Randolph Churchill are alike silent on the one question which the English public wants answered: What are they going to do about Ireland? Friday's Cabinet is believed to have resolved to continue to do nothing. Lord Randolph Churchill's will, as usual, prevails, and he regards the alliance with Mr. Parnell as the sole hope of preventing the return of the Liberals to power. Nobody in England doubts the accuracy of Mr. Trevelyan's description of the condition of Ireland. In most parts of the island no rent whatever is paid; boycotting is virulent and almost universal; but the Tory cabinet, as Englishmen think, prefers to tolerate the subversion of the law and social disorganization rather than lose the chance of buying Mr Parnell's support. Roughly speaking, England has to choose between the policy which tends toward an ultimate surrender to Mr. Parnell, and a policy which embodies a serious menace to the existing organization of society. Both may be avoided, if moderate men regain control of both parties, but extreme men at this moment are most influential in both.

Smallpox in Montreal.

Over Two Thousand Deaths Since the Outbreak.

MONTREAL, Oct. 27.—Official returns at the health office show that there were forty deaths from smallpox yesterday in the city, 3 in Cote St. Louis, 1 in St. Jean Baptiste, 1 in Ste. Cunegonde, 2 in St. Henri and 1 in Cote St. Paul; a total of 48 deaths.

The new disinfecting machine ordered in London by the health department, has arrived by the steamer Caspian.

Cases of smallpox have broken out at Chambly Basin and Chambly Canton, said to have been contracted in the city.

The number of deaths in the city from smallpox since the beginning of the epidemic was:—

April	3
May	13
June	22
July	84
August	102
October (25 days)	1,980

Feeding the Faithful

And Fattening Them at the Public Crib.

Toronto breakwater, though repaired at much cost with Dominion money, appears to be a very poor piece of work. The storms are gradually washing it away, and an application for an appropriation to do the work over again may be looked for. Then at Galt the greater portion of the new postoffice has tumbled down through sheer inability to remain standing. Perhaps the chief cause for the collapse was the lack of proper inspection of the masonry. The inspector was the editor of the Reporter, who can write a paragraph very well, and give a Tory tinge to anything he makes up his mind to; but when it comes to building houses he is out of his element. He should leave that to practical builders. That he does not know how one stone should be laid on another, we can safely assert. We do not object to his obtaining all the patronage he can secure—up till now he has received little compared with organs like the London Free Press and the Hamilton Spectator—but we do object to the appointment of any unpractical man to the post of a Government building inspector. "Every man to his trade." This editor-builder receives $3 a day while the job is in progress. What does he do for the work? Simply nothing. Yet the taxpayers of the country, with a deficit of over two and a quarter million dollars, will have to pay for this (to them) worthless service, and provide for the re-erection of the collapsed structure as well. The country pays high prices for its work, and the people have a right to ask that it should be done well.—Hamilton Times.

The liabilities of Gilbert & Coderre, boot and shoe manufacturers of Montreal, who failed a few days ago, are about $8,000.

In the "blue ribbon" beer cases at Toronto, judgment was reserved. Two witnesses swore that seven glasses made them intoxicated.

Grand masses are being said daily at St. Roch's, Quebec, for protection against the smallpox.

Mr. Bergin, of the Quebec militia, has been appointed an inspector of the North-West mounted police.

A man named Ingham fell through a hoist at St. Roch's hospital and broke his ankle. He was taken up by two of the men employed to carry away the corpses, and carried back to his bed where he died.

Montreals' Malady.

MONTREAL, Oct. 28. — The mortality by smallpox in the city and suburbs yesterday was forty-six, and the new cases reported seventy-five. Further evidence has been published to-day corroborating the charges of horrible neglect and mismanagement in St. Roch's hospital. The matter was discussed at the Health Board meeting, but no new light was thrown upon the subject, as the members seemed as much, if not more, surprised than the outside public at the terrible exposures. No investigation into the charges was ordered. The number of patients in the hospitals is three hundred and twenty-seven, and further accommodation is ordered to be provided for seven hundred more. Isolation must be given up.

The Scott Act Scrutiny.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR,—The executive of the Scott Act Association think it is due to those who voted for the Act, to reveal the "inwardness" of the scrutiny now pending before the county judge. Shortly after the vote was taken application was made by H. Calcutt, brewer, who had as sureties W. Croft and T. Cavanagh, tavern keepers, (all liberal temperance men), for a scrutiny of the ballots cast in the election. It was granted by the Judge to take place on the 15th Oct. The Returning Officer, Dr. Ford, appeared at the specified time with the ballots, but no recount was made, and after asking applicants asked for delay, in order to secure witnesses to prove alleged illegal Acts in connection with the taking of the vote. The delay was granted, although the Judge acknowledged that he had no power to order the attendance of any witness, and in fact had no jurisdiction except in the matter of a recount.

We are perfectly willing to have the fullest inquiry into the election, but only before the proper tribunal, and think it is very unfair that the proceedings should be delayed now, when the only thing the county judge can do is to recount the ballots. Since the first delay, the scrutiny has been adjourned twice, and now nothing more will be done for a fortnight. It will easily be understood by the public that the object of these postponements is to prevent the Returning Officer from making his returns to the Governor-General in Council in time to have the Act put in force on 1st May next. As this is contrary to the desire of a large majority of the electors in this county, as shown by the vote taken, we protest very strongly against the unwarrantable delay. Unfortunately, the Scott Act Association have no means of forcing the matter to a speedy conclusion. The counsel for the Anti-Scott party stated that he wanted a fortnight's delay to enable him to make up his mind whether he would proceed with a count of the ballots, and notwithstanding that this was objected to, and the object of the delay pointed out, the learned judge in the use of his discretion granted the delay. Such a matter lies wholly in his discretion, and if by such successive adjournments the operation of the act shall be thrown over for a year, the people will understand that those to whom the direction of matters has been entrusted by the Scott Act party, are not to blame. I am, sir,

Yours, etc.,
GEO. E. WILLIAMS,
Secretary Scott Act Association.
Peterborough, Oct. 28th, 1885.

Account for the Facts.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I find the following clipping in a recent issue of the Port Hope Times. Will you be good enough to re-produce it in your columns.

Yours, etc.,
ANTI-SCOTT ACT.
Peterborough, Oct. 29th, 1885.

"A correspondent of the Milton Champion asks the Acton Free Press, a thorough-going Scott Act paper, the following:—"How do you account for the following facts: In the year 1882, when the Scott Act came in force, we (of Acton) were taxed 10 mills on the dollar, and no person complained; 1883, 15 mills on the dollar—a few complained; 1884 17½ mills on the dollar—a great number complained; 1885, the present rate, is 22 mills all complaining; that our taxes should more than double in three years, and to add to this mystery, the assessed value of our real estate has decreased $12,000. Please inform us why our taxes should increase, and our property decrease in value in a Scott Act county."

Relations of Teachers to the School Board.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I have noticed several letters written for a local newspaper, by a teacher, who must be a crank. He may have been a good carpenter, but certainly he mistook his vocation, when he assumed the birch as a teacher, and he is now being used as a tool by the very individual who has done more to injure him in regard to his professional reputation than he will soon recover from. I would ask if this is the same Mr. Beatty, who has been requested, for unbecoming conduct to hand in his resignation at the next meeting of the board. I am sure the ratepayer, of the town will thank the Board for passing the resolution putting a stop to teachers absenting themselves, at will, and, as I am informed, on more than one occasion, from the effects of—well, not exactly advocating or practising the principles of the Scott Act. If Teachers' Conventions will improve some of our teachers in their habits and others in their manners and qualifications, by all means give them half a dozen Conventions in the year. It is certainly time that the School Board looked more closely after their teachers, and bestowed more attention to a consideration of the effects which the examples set by teachers exercise upon the forming minds and habits of the pupils at their most impressionable age.

By giving the above space in your next impression, you will oblige,

Yours truly,
ONE INTERESTED.
Peterborough, Oct. 29th, 1885.

Cobourg.

The Assizes in Cobourg opened yesterday, before Mr. Justice O'Conner. The docket is a heavy one, consisting of 7 civil jury, 3 non-jury, and 8 criminal cases. The latter comprise 3 felony, 1 arson, 2 larceny, and one shooting with intent. If Cobourgers would pay a little less attention to crime, and more to honest industry, the town might be able to pay its debts.

PRUDENT ADMINISTRATION.

The Tory organs urge the point against the Ontario Government, that in selling our timber limits the latter is expending the capital of the province. If this is truth, it is only half the truth. To illustrate; two men have each large sums of money deposited in a bank, drawing good interest. One continues to draw his interest, and foolishly allows his funds to remain, though he knows the bank is liable to collapse at any moment. The crash comes; the money is gone, interest capital and all. The other wisely withdraws his money and expends it in erecting permanent buildings. He is using his capital, but not wasting it—only changing the form of investment. The Ontario Government's timber limits recently sold, and about which the howl is raised, are surrounded by limits now being worked, and the danger of destruction by forest fires, is one to which they are constantly exposed. If the limits remain unsold, and are swept away by fire, the people of this province are the losers. If they are sold, and the money invested in public institutions of a permanent character, such as asylums for the blind, insane, etc., etc., is not this course a wise one? If the timber limits remained unsold, and were destroyed by fire, the organs would screech; if they are sold and the proceeds applied so that the people receive the benefit, the organs, still screech. It is best, then, to do what is prudent, and let a hireling press howl, and earn its subsidies by a course of factious obstruction to honest government and prudent administration.

THE CUNNING CHIEFTAIN.

Sir John is a cunning politician. From the moment that legislative monstrosity, the Franchise Bill, was introduced into Parliament, he has trimmed and hedged and has given way when popular indignation indicated that certain features would be fatal to his popularity. He saw that the revising barrister in his crude form was a hideous outrage which would not be tolerated. Therefore, a big batch of judges was created to enable him to give an air of respectability to this department of his franchise scheme, by appointing them as revising officers. This arrangement, at first view is, apparently, fair. But all the judges made revising officers do not possess certificates of character like that required of Cæsar's wife. Here is the secret. There is no appeal allowed from the decision of a revising officer, if that officer is a judge. Therefore, it is more to Sir John's advantage to have a friendly judge act as revising officer than a barrister, ever so eminent and honest, whose decisions may be appealed from and are, therefore, subject to change, the party of course being the loser. Appointing so many judges revising barristers was not such a lofty piece of statesmanship after all. Sir John knew very well what he was about. Virgil advises us to beware of the Greeks, even when they approach with armsful of gifts. Canadians have learned to keep a weather eye out on Sir John when he poses in the rare role of doing a virtuous or magnanimous action for its own sake. Depend upon it, there is something at the bottom tending to his own political advantage.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The London people have become tired of running the Western Fair as a sort of corporation concern; and a scheme is on foot to hand over its management to a joint stock company.

The Yankees are fond of describing this country as frozen Canada. Yet in the United States in several places snow has fallen in advance of that wintry indication in this Dominion. On Tuesday Dakota was visited with a heavy snowfall.

The London Advertiser gives the following wholesome advice to the members of the Reform party:—Now is the time for the Reform party to work, because it is what they do during the remainder of the year that will, in a large degree, determine whether they will win or not at the next election. We urge upon our friends the propriety of earnest and unremitting exertion to ascertain who, in every locality, is entitled to have his name placed upon the voters' lists under the new act. Reformers may be quite certain that all those who it is believed will vote on the opposite ticket will be pretty sure to be registered, but whether they are voters or not will depend upon whether they take the necessary steps to have their names placed upon the electoral lists.

The Toronto Mail editor candidly admits that though the use of tobacco may, under some circumstances, be objectionable, the pipe is "by no means so dangerous a companion as the little brown jug." This may be accepted, suggests the Hamilton Times, as the opinion of an expert.

In order to encourage mechanics and others to study industrial drawing, the sum of $200 will be paid by the Ontario Government to each Mechanics' Institute conducting classes under the departmental regulations. The government grant and pupils' fees would be sufficient to defray all the expenses. Is there any sufficient reason why the local Institute should not take advantage of this liberal provision of the Ontario Government? Hon. Mr. Mowat took the lead in giving the mechanics of Ontario votes, and in this matter he takes the lead in providing means, whereby mechanics, who, in early life did not enjoy educational advantages, or who may have neglected those they did possess, an opportunity of adding to their knowledge and of better fitting them to fulfil the duties of their calling and of rising to a higher position therein.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Tuesday last was a red letter day among the Presbyterians of Lakefield and vicinity, being the day selected for the induction into his new pastorate of the Rev. John McEwen late secretary for the Sunday School Association of Ontario. At the appointed time the church was crowded, not only by members of the congregation, but also by members of other churches. The services were opened by singing the 145th Psalm, and prayer by the Rev. Mr. Torrance, of Peterborough, and the sermon was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Mitchell, of Port Hope, who took for his text the 119th Psalm, 105th verse: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path. Rev. Mr. Cameron, of Millbrook, gave an able and interesting exposition on the policy of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. A. Bell, of Peterborough, delivered the charge to the minister, while the Rev. Mr. Carmichael, Norwood, addressed the charge to the members of the congregation. The service was very impressive and was brought to a close by the Rev. Mr. Hay, of Campbellford, asking the benediction. Among others present were the Rev. Mr. Bennett, of Springville, moderator, who occupied the chair, Rev. Mr. McFarlane, Methodist minister, Lakefield, and the Rev. Mr. De St. Dalmas, Baptist minister.

A MEAN TRICK.

On Saturday last while Mr. Wm. Sutton was driving to town his horse took sick and was unable to proceed. He took the harness off the horse and threw it into the light waggon he was driving while he hurried back to the village, about a mile distant, for a veterinary surgeon. On their return they found the horse dead and that somebody had stolen the harness out of the waggon during Mr. Sutton's absence. So far no trace of it has been discovered, though every effort has been made to obtain some clue to the mean thief.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

A meeting of the Lakefield Board of Health was held in the council chamber on Monday afternoon when several matters connected with the sanitary condition of the village were considered. It was determined to follow the example set by Peterborough and insist that all children attending the school should be vaccinated within the next two weeks, also requesting all the grown up people of the village, who have not been done for the last seven years, to be vaccinated. The medical men of the village were asked to take one day in the week and operate on all who desired for 25c. each, the Board to furnish the points required. The Inspector reported the sanitary condition of the village as very good, every house having been visited since the last meeting.

SCHOOL MEETING.

A meeting of the ratepayers of School Section No. 10 will be held in the council chamber next Friday at noon for the purpose of electing a trustee to take the place of Dr. Armour, who has left the village. As the unexpired term is only for two months very little interest is taken in the matter. Your correspondent would suggest that one of the 37 lady voters in the village be given a place at the Board.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

On Sunday, the 25th inst., special services were held in the church, of thanksgiving for the blessing of harvest, and to commemorate the completion of the sacred building by the erection of a handsome belfry-tower, to the memory of the late Col. Strickland. In the morning the service was conducted by Rev. John Farncomb, the incumbent; Rev. T. B. Angell of St. John's church, Peterboro' preaching an excellent sermon. In the evening the Rev. W. C. Bradshaw officiated, and addressed a large congregation on the duty of contributing of our substance to the service of God. The church has lately been handsomely painted. The walls are tinted with a warm shade of terras cotta, and a rich chocolate dado. In the chancel the chocolate is embellished with gilt fleur de lis, the work of one of the ladies of the congregation. A handsome crimson scroll is painted over the chancel arch, with the text "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," in gilt letters. Over the porch doors are the texts, "Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy house" and "I have hallowed this house to put My name there forever."—1st King ix. 3., in gold and silver letters on crimson scrolls. The festival decorations for harvest, consisting chiefly of flowers and fruit, were very tasteful. The collections during the day amounted to $27.50.

Johnny's Piety.

Little Johnny Frizzletop got the idea into his head from attending Sunday School that he could get anything he wants by simply praying for it. A few evenings ago while engaged in his devotions he prayed for a baseball, a pony, a new suit of Sunday clothes, a shotgun, a quarter of a dollar and various other things which he needed. While Johnny was thus praying his brother Tommy burst into tears and said in an agonized voice:

"Mamma, please make Johnny stop. He is praying everything away from me."

THE STAR OF EARTH.

He had made up his mind to escape from his suffering. The weapon was chosen. He had carried it since morning, lying in its rich case, cold, motionless, like a sleeping viper, ready to bite.

But the place and the hour suitable for this brief duel of a man with his life he had not yet clearly determined in his mind.

He was walking straight onward, looking at nothing, through the reddish mist of heat and dust in which the gas constellations of the boulevard were veiled.

It was the pervading fragrance of a southern flower, suddenly inhaled as he passed the gay display of a celebrated florist, that caused to drop into the cup of his soul, already so bitterly full, that last drop destined to bring its overflow.

That perfume! He had so often, with passion breathed it, mingled with the haunting odor of fine hair, as he leaned over the lovely head he loved more than all the earth.

The perfume called up at that moment the young woman, pitiless in her frivolity, to whom for three years—three years of soul-destroying alternations of mad hope and brutal disappointment; to whom his love, the love of a man of forty years, fiery and subtle, had had no other importance than as a sort of toilet auxiliary; something, perhaps, a little choicer than a rare fan.

She was far from scorning that love, no doubt. It was to her like some jewel of a captivating sort, which never grew commonplace, and which had the advantage of harmonizing with all her gowns; a treasure highly prized, even envied by certain women, whose superiority she secretly recognized.

He was, in brief, creditable to produce in public and cost her nothing, or almost nothing, which her prudence could have to regret—an occasional heavy look, a half smile, the touch of a finger as she passed a cup of tea.

Thus virtuous, but disloyal, instead of killing at once by an honest word the hope in the heart of a man whose love rendered him credulous, she replied to his first avowal of adoration by one of those phrases, prettily commonplace, or rejection of offered friendship, in which a seeker of his own pleasure would have seen an inacceptable offer of ideal tenderness which would have sent him off quickly, but which seemed, on the contrary, to this noble, loving spirit, purified by the sincerity of his passion, the very speech, veiled with modest reserve, of a soul palpitation in unison with his own.

He thought she loved him. She, without deliberate cruelty, even unconsciously, did not undeceive him. She did not wish to lose so complimentary an accessory to life, and that was all.

To-day, undeceived, alone, his love all vanished, the unhappy man who had given himself, without reserve, wished to have done with all things.

It is a very trite and old story, but the latest one to whom it has come has his heart broken.

"Come," said he, "it shall be to-night."

He quickened his step with his head on fire, reached a railroad station, took a ticket for one of the stations placarded in white on a blue ground whose name first caught his roving eye at a wicket, where an obliging employe reminded him to pick up his change.

He climbed into an empty compartment. He thought he should be able, once on the road, to throw off that terrible spasm that bound his chest continually and wrung from him deep sighs.

As the train was about to start a belated traveler, perspiring and panting, but pleased to find himself embarked at last, tumbled in beside him, in the midst of a little avalanche of packages and newspapers. The belated traveler was overflowing with good spirits. Any attempt to repress him would have been futile. His wife was expecting him. If he had missed the express they would have thought him dead at home. He pressed cigars and papers on his taciturn traveling companion. His taciturn companion, polite but cold, refused the newspapers and cigars—even refused to enter into conversation. He was lost in mournful contemplation of a haunting specter of the delicious and perfidious young woman in whose company one divine day last year he had traveled over this same route.

After an hour and a half of noisy gliding over the rails the train stopped.

Salting the belated traveler, the poor fellow with the ruined heart alighted from his car, and slowly emerged from the station to which chance had brought him by night, and whence, as appearance indicated, he was to set out a little later for a journey without end.

The dampness of the late rains, drawn upward by the ardent sun of the day just past, and condensed by the coolness of the evening, had rolled over the plains in dense fog. Except for the warmth of the atmosphere it was like a November night.

An obliging employe at the station offered to show the traveler to an inn. After a short walk through the thickest darkness he stood at the door of a comfortable looking house. An attractive but drowsy woman replied in person to the gentleman's ring.

In answer to the inquiry whether he would take supper he requested simply a bed and a bottle of her best wine to be served in his room, with two fine glasses.

The wine and glasses were according brought, and he was left with kind wishes for the night.

He seated himself heavily before the polished table, drew from the pocket of his cloak a small object covered with brown leather and opened it. The weapon now lay at hand.

Then he took the venerable bottle, with seal discolored like a corpse's lip, and filled to the brim the two thin, delicate glasses he had desired.

But he was not thirsty. Neither did he intend, in cowardly fashion, to benumb himself for the execution of his project. He needed, on the contrary, all his coolness, to avoid by lack of precision, the infliction of any unnecessary physical suffering.

In this act he paid homage to a long-lived memory of childhood and youth, which had suddenly bloomed afresh on this sad night.

Long ago, when his aged and charming father had some important plan to convey to him, or some slightly stern reproof to administer, he would ask him to his bed-chamber, would pour for them each a glass of rare and fragrant wine, and it was only after the glasses had been gently clinked together and emptied that this adored father, with his kind and lively eyes, would at length broach the matter in his thought.

The poor fellow, as he drank to-night in a solemn moment a glass of the wine his father would have loved, wished farewell to that dear memory, that at least he might die with an honored name on his lips. It was a last and a heart-breaking interview. It seemed to him that on the other side of the table once more sat that kindly presence, the brave heart that had rescued and consoled him from so many follies in the past, this time with a tearful smile, and speaking more gently than ever, straight home to his soul.

Bowing his head he heard the phantom recall to him the days, and nights spent by his parents, thin and pallid with anxiety, giving the flower of life to win health and strength for their noble son, to-day about to destroy in a second the honest and sturdy body which had been their pride. He would put out the life of the child whose gayety and strength had been the sole reward of their life of labor and pains.

"Oh, father! father! forgive me, father! but I must. I cannot bear the thought that she is a stranger to me, that I shall never see her again in this life * * * that she does not love me! I cannot! Gorgive me, father!"

Suffocating with sobs he opened the only window in the little room. A breath of fog wet his face delicately and did him good. He stood still, receiving the rain on his brow. Deep silence reigned everywhere, in the street he dimly guessed at outside, and in the hotel where he was agonizing the last moments of his life. It must be very late. Opposite him, vague in the vapor, at the height of an attic window he saw a feeble light.

"Doubtless," said he to himself, "it is a light still burning in the chamber of some miserable mortal, less an outcast than I, however, if his heart is at peace."

The feeble light, a star of earth, moved slightly at intervals. It might have been likened to the beacon of a vessel riding at anchor and seen from the port.

But he thought only of that brother in sorrow, whom the dim lamp of a watcher had suddenly revealed so near him.

"Perhaps," he resumed, "it is not a man, strong, able to resist his fate, but some woman, a wretched factory worker, a mother even, the victim of a miserable sot to whom fate and nature had bound her. Poor creature! receive this sterile cry of pity from a dying man!"

The little light still shone, feeble and vague. With emotion he murmured:

"Ah! poor, resigned, courageous girl! Often at night when you come weary from your heavy task a terrible desire seizes your heart as you cross the black river, but clinging to your miserable gown are two thin little hands, two adored little hands, the hands of the wasted infant with whom you are watching at this moment, and who wails in his sad cradle imploring the warmth of your kisses. But I—I have nothing left to love in my deep distress."

After a long silence of bitter reflection he sighed and began again to talk to the night.

"And yet I feel myself more feeble and selfish than the wailing infant up there torturing the inexhaustible mother's heart. Yes, I am more selfish and more blindly cowardly than he. What am I and what have I ever done? Rich, idle, have I for an instant during the week of madness that preceded this day summoned the resignation before suffering and the courage before adversity of which this poor girl offers me an example to-night? Have I ever thought of disposing in some useful manner of the money which my sudden end will fling to hands of those who do not need it? No; I have thought only of myself and of—— ——, one not worth this heroic toiler. Poor girl!"

He recoiled himself with a shiver, and, with eyes still fixed on the light, which was growing dimmer through the fog, he continued:

"I bless you, unknown friend, in this new hour; for you open my eyes; you teach me duty and sacrifice. I am alone, bleeding with a wound that no time can heal, but this hand, I swear, shall not shorten by one hour the succession of many days that remain for me to live. A more noble task is reserved for it—it shall do good. And my companion in sorrow shall be the first to be relieved."

He slept in his chair till broad day. When he awoke the fog had evaporated. A ray of sunshine was playing upon the weapon, which lay forgotten on the table. He coldly shut the case that held it, and put it into his pocket.

"Life begins to-day," said he.

He went to the window. He wished to see and salute the attic window whose light, during that stormy night, had guided him, like the flame of a distant beacon, into quiet waters and near the shore of safety.

He looked and saw nothing there. There was no house before his eyes.

"Was I dreaming?"

He had not dreamed. There had really been a light shining on him through the fog; only, as he perceived after a short examination, and smiled slightly, it had been a distant headlight in the yard of the station.

But what mattered it? He had resolved to follow the path which the good Samaritan had trodden before him, and which he had left fragrant with the sweetness of his good action.

Pain as Related to Meteorology.

It is generally known that depressic of spirits and rheumatic pains have long been associated with a falling barometer and storm-brewing conditions—unusually severe neuralgic attacks coinciding with unusually intense storm development. To establish in his own case this relation of pain and weather, Captain Catlin, of the United States army, made a regular and detailed record, in connection with the weather variations, of the variations of his neuralgic pains. From the published account, Captain Catlin's foot was crushed by a shot in 1864, and it was necessary to amputate his leg below the knee. He continued to experience sensations of pain, as if in the lost member, these sensations being greater or less according to the atmospheric disturbances. Arranged in months, March naturally took the lead as a pain producer; then came, in order, January, November, December, May, February, April, August, October, September, July and June. He traced the average distance of the storm center at the beginning of the pain attack by investigating sixty well defined storms in ten consecutive months; it was 680 miles, ranging from two to 1,200 miles.

Showing the Old Man a Room.

One day a German soldier arrived at an inn in a Swiss town, fatigued, dusty and travel-worn. The landlord was on the point of telling him he was "full," but finally ordered a waiter to show the "old man" to a dismal little room in the upper part of the house. The waiter shortly after brought him a little book in which he asked him to sign his name, which he did, the waiter carrying the book back to the landlord. "My God," said the landlord, looking at the name and ... ging his hands, "what have I done? In one of the servant's bed rooms! My hotel will be ruined." And he flew about as if half crazy. All the waiters were summoned, the handsomest suit of rooms in the house ordered in immediate readiness, and the conscious-stricken landlord departed for the upper regions to make his apologies to the seedy-looking "old man," and to transfer him to more elegant quarters. "I beg ten thousand pardons. I would not have done it for the world, but I did not know that it was you—ten thousand pardons," said the quaking landlord, half out of breath. "But what have you done that you should need to be pardoned?" asked the "old man." "This room—it is not the room for you. It was a mistake. I did not know who you was. I have some rooms for you below—an elegant suite of rooms—may I beg you to have your baggage removed to them at once?" "May I ask what is the matter with this room?" inquired the "old man," who had stripped off his coat and vest and rolled up his shirt-sleeves for a wash; "I have slept for years in quarters not as comfortable as this." "It is too small and the furniture too ordinary. The rooms which I have for you below are those which I reserve for princes and distinguished guests." "What is the price of them?" inquired the "old man." "Only one hundred francs a day." "And the price of this room is how much?" "A bagatelle—but three francs." "Well, as my stay is short, you must excuse me if I do not change my quarters. I think I shall sleep as sound on that bed as on any bed in your house." And Von Moltke, the great military strategist, was allowed to remain undisturbed, much to the annoyance and chagrin of the landlord

A Point.

I met a succession of dramatists on the square yesterday, says the New York correspondent of the Chicago News Letter. They left Union Square Theatre like the radii of a circle—each darting off to his respective lodgings, without speaking. They were Elliot Dawn, Archie Gunter, Fred. Marsden and Woolf, of Boston. "What's the matter with the literary talent?" I inquired of George Knight, the comedian. The jolly little joker gave rein to a broad grin. "I've been giving them points," said he. "Up to some more of your devilry?" said I. "Judge for yourself," replied George. "I got an idea for a point in a play, and I gave it out in perfect good faith, that's all." "What's your point?" "This: I make the villain of the scene plot a murder, and begin by fixing up an alibi. He paints a mouse under his eye, and a scratch on his cheek, and the characters are made to remark that some one has apparently put a head on him. Then he goes to work and commits murder. No sooner is it done than he washes his face; the paint comes off, the black eye disappears, and his alibi is complete. You see? The interesting young woman of the play says the man who committed the deed had a black eye. It was the false heir, Trevanion Vere de Vere. Seize him! He is seized. Removing his slouch hat, he boldly faces his accusers, saying: 'Behold! I have no black eye! I have no head on me! A mouse is not got rid of in an hour! I am innocent!' Tableau! How's that?" "That's a point that discounts the English sensation drama," I acquiesced; "but who's doing it?" "They're all doing it. I've given it to every dramatist I know, and each of them is going t...

A Choice Selection.

Fair, VanEvery & Coy's. importation this season of Scotch Tweeds for Suits, Naps and Beavers for Overcoats, Mantle and Ulster Cloths, are meeting with ready sale, and are being made up in best styles by their experienced cutter. All orders for Suits and Overcoats will be executed with neatness and despatch.

An Omission.

Our attention has been called to the fact that in the list published in the DAILY EXAMINER of the contributors to the Brown Memorial Fund, the names of Mr. John Carnegie, M.P.P., which was put down for $10, was omitted. The name was in the "copy supplied the compositor, but that inscrutable being, with the remarkable ingenuity that distinguishes some members of his class, cleverly managed to omit it.

An Unfortunate Rumour.

Mr. R. Purser, of the Purser House, Lakefield, having heard that rumors were afloat to the effect that he has the smallpox, desires most empathically to deny the statement. Neither he nor any person in his house, or indeed in Lakefield, has the disease. Mr. Purser is better prepared than ever to entertain the public honouring him with their patronage. The practice of circulating without any foundation, such rumours as that complained of by Mr. Purser, is doing a great wrong, and is most reprehensible and annoying.

The Boom in Barley.

There is a brisk demand for barley in the local market and prices are well up. Yesterday extra bright and good barley brought as high as 83 cents per bushel. The local activity is caused by a strong demand from the Western States for good barley, the crop in that region being badly stained. The high market may last or may not, most probably not, and farmers who market their barley will secure top prices, which will most probably be followed by a corresponding drop when the boom ends.

A New Drug Store.

The handsome new drug store opposite the Oriental Hotel, on Hunter street, has been opened by Mr. J. Nugent, late of Lindsay. The interior of the shop has been fitted up in the most attractive manner with all the most improved accessories of a first-class drug establishment, and is lighted by electric light. The dispensing cabinet, a very complete and handsome piece of shop furniture, is the first of its kind in town, and was exhibited at the Toronto exhibition, where it secured a first prize. Mr. Nugent come to Peterborough, bringing a high reputation as a careful and skillful dispenser, and will carry a first-class stock of drugs and druggists goods. We bespeak for him a generous share of public patronage.

Orange Entertainment.

A musical and literary entertainment under the the auspices of the Orange Association, will be held on Thursday evening, November 5th. An attractive programme, particulars of which will be given in a few days is in course of preparation.

Mrs. T. Charles Watson.

Till lately, Mrs. Watson has not appeared much in Canada, except in the larger cities—Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and Quebec,—where she has met with wonderful success. She is now, however, making an Ontario tour, and is drawing crowded houses everywhere.

West Ward School.

The new school room in the West Ward school building has been completed and seated, and the new teacher has entered upon her duties there. This will relieve the overcrowding from which the school has of late suffered so much.

What They are Saying.

We looked well in our claw hammer coats last night.—The masons.

They had railways before the flood.—Dr. Wild.

Oh! come off doctor.—The skeptics.

We hoped the Murphy Company would have played the Shaughran to-night—Theatre goers.

We would have liked to oblige you, but—we can't.—The Company.

What a nice day.—Dealers in umbrellas and waterproofs.

We Would Like to Know.

Who holds the patent on the seats in Bradburn's Hall.

And if anything more supremely uncomfortable could be devised.

If Dr. Wild's audience believed all he told them last night.

If Shem, who the doctor says was the first boss Mason, ever rode the goat. (A craftsman, reading over our shoulder, says this is a shameful question.)

Why, if the pyramid was built by Divine inspiration to hand down the secrets of antediluvian mechanics to modern ages, men have had to hunt out all these secrets without its help, and if the Divine purpose could fail.

How Dr. Wild and Rev. Millenium Baxter would agree in their theorizing.

What We May Expect.

A capital entertainment under the auspices of the Orangemen on Nov. 5th.

Suicides, if the present weather continues.

The rain to spoil the attendance at the Opera House this evening.

The Freemasons to take an interest in "the Widow of Nain."

A boom in barley.

And farmers to hurry in their grain.

And merchants to look forward hopefully to an early settlement.

Winds between north-east and north, cloudy to partly cloudy, cool weather, with light rain in a few places.

Mr. McPherson, who looks after the passenger interests of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway, is here to-day, as is also Mr. H. B. Jagoe, Canadian Travelling Agent of the New York and West Shore Railway.

The Drift Toward Cities.

No development of modern civilization is more striking or significant than the steady drift of population from the country to the cities. It is not a characteristic of any one nation or race. With so few exceptions that they only establish the rule, it holds true to the civilized world.

A recent report by consul Ryder, of Copenhagen, calls attention to this feature of the last Danish census. The kingdom contains 1,980,257 inhabitants, which is an increase of 185,526 over the census of ten years before. By far the largest proportional gain was in the capital, the population of Copenhagen having grown at the annual rate of 2.62 per cent. during the last decade. The provincial towns throughout the country show uniformly large gains, while the growth of the rural districts was slower than ever before, being only 6.1 per cent. for the ten years, as against 9.7 per cent. in the first decade of the century. The result of this movement from country to town is seen in the smaller relative difference between the population of the rural districts and the cities than that which formerly existed. In 1840 the population of the rural districts was nearly four times that of all the cities. Now the ratio is only about 2½ to 1.

The relative growth of the urban population in the United States has been still more rapid. In 1800 less than 4 per cent. of the inhabitants lived in the six cities, and the proportion increased during the next forty years only 8.5 per cent. in the forty cities that existed in 1840. But in the succeeding forty years this per centage was nearly trebled, rising 12.5 per cent. in 1850, 16.1 in 1860, 20.9 in 1870 and 22.5 in 1880, when the number of all cities had risen to 286. The census of 1890 will show that a full quarter of the people of the United States live in its cities, against only a thirtieth of the whole population in 1790.

The change is even more striking when the metropolis alone is considered. In 1800 New York City had 60,489 inhabitants out of the 589,051 in the state, and the 5,308,483 in the country. In 1880 it had 1,206,299 inhabitants, out of 5,082,871 in the state, and 50,155,783 in the country. In other words, at the beginning of the century New York City contained only about one-tenth of the whole population of New York State, and one eighty-seventh part of the population of the whole country; in 1880 it contained almost one-fourth of all the people in the state and nearly one-fortieth of all the people in the country.

There is abundant food for reflection in such figures and comparisons as these. They show how very different is the United States of to-day, with about one-fourth of the people living in cities, from the United States of President Washington's day, when the half dozen towns dignified by the name of cities had altogether but 131,472 inhabitants to a rural population almost thirty times as great. They indicate the gravity of the new problems in government with which a massing of population within city limits confronts modern civilization.—Brooklyn Union.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

Mr. Williams and the Scott Act.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

In the DAILY EXAMINER of the 29th inst., there is a communication from Geo. E. Williams. The heading of the article is: "The Scott Act Scrutiny." This article contains some sneers and misrepresentation. The sneers are aimed at the appellant and his securities; at the learned Judge on the bench and at the counsel for the anti-Scott Act party. It would be an insult to intelligent, respectable citizens to suppose that they could be either elevated or depressed by anything which Mr. Geo. E. Williams could either say or think concerning them.

Let us now for a moment look at the misrepresentation contained in Mr. Williams' letter. Mr. Williams, in speaking of the postponements which may prevent the Scott Act from coming into force on the 1st of May next, says: "As this is contrary to the desire of a large majority of the electors in this county, as shown by the vote taken, etc." Now the number of electors in the town of Peterborough is about 1,900, and of this number only 451 voted for the Scott Act. We would like to know how Mr. Williams makes 451 a "large majority" of 1,900! We might go over the whole County and show that not one-third of the electors voted for the Scott Act, and yet this young man, in a loose, pious, clerical way, tells us that a "large majority" voted for it. But who is this Mr. Geo. E. Williams who makes himself so officious about the Scott Act in this county, and who so flippantly sneers at our respectable citizens?

Mr. Williams is an irresponsible individual who follows no industrial pursuit, and who pays no taxes. In a word, he is a person who lives by the voluntary contributions of the faithful, and who is decorated with the title of Secretary of the Peterborough Y.M. C.A. That is to say, Mr. Williams is a sort of religious parasite or fungus, which draws nourishment from the body to which it is attached. In conclusion we would remind Mr. Williams that however zealous a man may be in any cause, he should never let his zeal degenerate into fanaticism. We would also request Mr. Williams to be more accurate in his statements, and to be careful to speak the truth at all times, even if he is the Secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

Yours truly,
X.

The Canadian Pacific.

A Fleet of St. Lawrence Steamers to be Built—An American Story Denied.

Mr. Duncan McIntyre, ex-vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and one of its largest shareholders, has sailed for Scotland for the purpose, it is understood of ordering the construction of a fleet of iron steamers to run in connection with the road from Kingston through the Thousand Islands to Montreal and Quebec. A meeting of the stockholders of the Royal Canadian Passenger Steamship Company, the corporation which will build and run the steamers, will be held on the 7th prox at the Windsor Hotel for the purpose of electing directors. The capital stock, according to one of the officers of the company, has all been subscribed.

The New York Times of yesterday publishes a story relating how "the syndicate is now engaged in booming the stock, and when it has reached respectable figures they sell out and allow the reins of government to pass into the hands of some other Englishmen of means who are anxious to pose as railway managers."

This story is flatly denied by the officers of the company here who say that they haven't even heard anything of the Baring Brothers' loan except what has appeared in the press telegrams.—Kingston Whig.

More Miscreants Missing.

Chief A. D. Stewart, of Hamilton, must spend a good deal of his time in sending notices around the country of fugitive thieves. Chief Johnston received another post card from him at noon to-day, asking the police here to look out for Frank and Mary Kelp, aged 23 and 24 respectively. They are charged with a robbery of jewelery in the Ambitious City.

The Slaughter of Game.

Chief of Police Williams arrived home Monday night after a three weeks' holiday, spent in the district of Haliburton, back of Peterborough, hunting. He reports that partridge and other game are abundant up there, and that he had a splendid time knocking them over. He gives some idea of the manner in which Canadian deer are being slaughtered to supply the American markets. He met a hunting party up there from Buffalo, among whom were two butchers, who had secured 27 deer, and were carrying them off to the Buffalo market. The process they follow for slaughtering deer is as follows: There are in Haliburton district many settlers who depend mostly on hunting for a living. If anybody wants to secure any game he must hire one or more of these settlers, who know the country thoroughly. They charge $5 a day and upwards. A "sportsman" secures game in proportion to the number of days he hunts for his game and services and those of his dogs. The hunter posted the parties in this case near a small lake to which a deer-run led. He then beat the bush with his dogs, and when the deer were all driven down the "run" into the water, they were mercilessly shot down, bucks, does and fawns being slaughtered without distinction. The party the chief met had secured 27, all of which were shipped off to Buffalo. To ship game out of the country is unlawful, but as the customs officials are generally watching for those who are smuggling contraband goods into the country, they pay very little attention to those who are taking them out of it, and this sort of thing has become a regular business. In the case of this party, however, the customs authorities did wake up, and seized and confiscated four deer. The balance, however, seem to have been successfully smuggled out of the country, and before this, no doubt, are in fat upon the Buffalonians. A short time before the chief got there another party had bagged eighteen and taken them off to the States to sell.—London Advertiser.

The Loss of the "Princess Royal."

OTTAWA, Oct. 28.—The news has just been received here of the loss of the Hudson Bay Company's ship the "Princess Royal," of London, at Sand Head Beach, at the mouth of Moose River, on the second of this month. She had left the harbor on the first and was anchored outside the Bar, when a gale arose and she parted her cable and drove ashore. She had some furs on board, but the greater part of the returns of the last two seasons had been sent home by the bark "Prince of Wales," in July, this vessel having wintered at Charlton Island.

New Through Mail Arrangements.

On Monday, 2nd November, the new through mail system between Montreal and Winnipeg will be inaugurated. Trains will leave Montreal at 2 p.m., and Ottawa at 5.37 p.m. daily, Sundays excepted, and reach Winnipeg daily, Wednesday excepted, at about 7 a.m. Trains will leave Winnipeg daily, Saturday excepted, at 7 p.m., and reach Ottawa daily, Tuesday excepted at 7.46 a.m., and Montreal at 12.35 p. m. The time occupied between Montreal and Winnipeg, either way, will be about sixty-five hours. There will be a through postal car service between Ottawa and Winnipeg. It will be divided into two sections, one between Ottawa and Port Arthur and the other between Port Arthur and Winnipeg.

England's Justification.

The following versicle pretty accurately indicates the character of His Atrocity, Thebaw, king of Burmah, whose disregard of international county has brought him, by this time under the guns of the Indian Government. It furnishes England ample justification, if she decides on annexing, and, consequently, civilizing the Burmese dominions:

I'M THEBAW,
Of Burmah.
With delirium tremens I'm sufferin'
I'm the red-handed ogre of Mandalay.
I butcher a man or two every day,
Save when I'm ill and my blood is mild,
When I slay a woman, or else a child;
My claws are like those of the beasts I own,
I'm a wolf in cloths on a reeking throne,
I'm a tawny brute, with a taste for blood,
And a great contempt for the threatening Lud Dufferin;
Let him come with his troops, I will eat them raw!
I'm hungry and ugly, I'm old Thebaw,
Of Burmah;
With delerium tremens I'm suffering!

The Repairs to Smith Street Bridge.

At the last meeting of the Town Council, considerable complaint was made by some of the members about the delay in the repairs to Smith Street Bridge, and it was made to appear that the contractor, Mr. T. H. Thornton, was altogether to blame in the matter. Mr. Thornton called at the EXAMINER office this morning and requested that the following statement be made public. The arrangement was that the town should supply all material for the repairs; and as soon as he had secured the contract, Mr. Thornton was ready foe work with two men. Since then he and his men have most of the time been kept idle waiting for material, as Mr. Thornton refused other work offered him and his men at $2 per day, in order that he might complete his contract with the town. The delay at length compelled him to accept other employment, as he would otherwise have been entirely idle. The necessary material arrived on the ground a week ago yesterday, when Mr. Thornton was not in a position to at once begin the work. He does not wish to cast any blame on Mr. Belcher for the failure in supply of material, being convinced that that gentlemen made every effort to have it supplied. He says that is no fault of either his or Mr. Belcher's that the contract has not been completed, but suggests that some members of the council who were very ready to find fault would have no difficulty is fixing the blame of the delay in the proper quarter.

The Anglo-Turkish Convention.

LONDON, Oct 29.—In the Convention which Sir Henry Drummond Wolff has concluded with the Porte, Turkey virtually agrees to the indefinite prolongation of the British occupation of Egypt, and consents to assist in the pacification of the Soudan. Each of the Commissioners, while working on the plans for reform, will act as under the direct instructions of his own Government. The application of the reforms is to begin only when both governments are fully agreed upon the same measures.

The Burmese Warcloud.

Troops En Route.

CALCUTTA, Oct. 29.—The steamer "Irrawaddy" and two steam launches have left Rangoon for the Burmese frontier. It is reported the steamer with fugitive Europeans on board had been fired upon by the Minhlor fort. The troops for the proposed expedition to Burmah have arrived here from Madras.

Burmah Likely to be Annexed.

RANGOON, Oct. 20.—Myhola, on the frontier, near Toungoo, is being strongly stockaded and garrisoned to prevent raids in the province. The steamer "Irrawaddy" carries a supply of explosives to remove obstructions in the river. It is proposed as soon as any town or district is occupied to leave a civil officer to reorganize the Government with the assistance of Burmese local officials.

The Eastern Question.

The Porte Declines to Negotiate.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 29.—The Sultan declines to negotiate with Prince Alexander in regard to the union of Bulgaria and Roumelia, on the ground that the conference will deal with the question.

The Greeks Ready for War.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 29.—It is reported that the Greek Government finds it very difficult to control the people at Athens. Mobs are parading the streets demanding arms. The mobs have been more than once on the point of smashing the windows of the British legation because England will not promise to give Greece the remainder of Thessaly should the Bulgarian union be permitted to stand. The people talk loudly about helping themselves, and say they are ready to attack Turkey. In naval circles, however, there is the greatest anxiety about Hobart Pasha coming down with Turkish ironclads to bombard the coast towns.

The Balkan Conference.

LONDON, Oct. 29.—France and England have notified the Porte of their readiness to take part in the Balkan Conference. The Servian Minister here writes that the Bulgarian coup d'etat has not created but has merely intensified the long-existing tension between Servia and Bulgaria. Even without the coup d'etat he believes the Bulgarian and Servian armies would now have been opposing each other.

Servian Wants Peace.

BELGRADE, Oct. 26.—The Servian Premier has sent a note to the Powers, in which he expresses a desire for peace on the basis of the Berlin Treaty. He also says he hopes to see the Sultan's authority restored in Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia.

Austria vs. Russia.

LONDON, Oct. 29.—Despatches from St. Petersburg to-day state the Russian Cabinet officials allege that Austria and Servia are intriguing for territorial aggrandizement detrimental to Russian interests in the Balkan peninsula. Their information must have been received from what they consider a reliable source as Russia has for the past few days been secretly arming with a view of being prepared at any moment should the contingency arise to assert her claims in the Balkan States.

EXTRAVAGANCE AND CORRUPTION.

Mr. James Trow, M. P., who has been making a tour of investigation in the North-west Territories, thus refers to the scandalous extravagance and corruption which prevailed during the time of the military expendition last spring. Wonderful stories are told in reference to the furnishing of oats etc., for the volunteers under General Middleton. It is said that Major Bell purchased oats from Major Bell, freighted them with Major Bell's teams across the salt plains at Clarke's Crossing, occupying ten or twelve days in the journey, at $8 or $10 per day, and that Major Bell's horses were fed during the trip with government supplies purchased from Major Bell. Others say that the rebellion was a good harvest for hundreds of settlers, more particularly those who owned horses; that scores made during the troubles from $800 to $1,000 with one team. Supplies were purchased at fabulous figures and scattered promiscuously over the plains. Every station house was filled with canned meats and fruits purchased in the United States. Thousands of dollars' worth of these were sold off after the close of the rebellion at great reductions on the original cost.

FALSE IMPUTATIONS.

The Mail, Review and other Conservative organs have so infrequent chances of the semblance of a reason for attacking the policy and practice of the Mowat administration, that they pounce upon the most trifling matter, wherein their maliguity can acent anything, which to their minds appears to be wrong, like a starved tabby upon a mouse. It is striven to make appear that the Ontario Government is urging upon Cobourg the payment of the latter's indebtedness to the province, because Cobourg and West Northumberland send a member opposed to the government. This assumption is made out of whole cloth. The fact is, that Cobourg originally indebted to the province in the um of $500,000, has the government to thank that the town received such an extensive measure of relief as reduced the indebtness to something like $77,000. If, at the time of the adjustment of the Municipal Loan Fund, Cobourg had acted wisely, not to say honestly, the whole debt would have been wiped out. With the assistance of the government the other municipalities of the province discharged their indebtedness, and if the Ontario Government is to blame in this matter, it is that while other corporations have promptly come to time, Cobourg has been too leniently dealt with. Instead of taking advantage of the chance offered her to provide for the payment of the debt, she has chosen to do nothing, and now when she is asked to pay an honest debt, the organs have the impudence to assert that it is because she helps to send an opponent of the administration of the day to the Legislature. There is no claim made that the liability is not a just one; no claim made that it should not be paid. The debt must be paid; some time must be selected to insist upon its payment. Hon. Mr. Mowat has chosen the present. According to the reasoning of the organs he should wait till the riding was represented by a supporter; but if the riding continues to show the poor judgment it has exhibited the past few years, in the selection of its representatives, for an indefinite period, their contention amounts to a repudiation of the debt. As the Ontario Government has a perfect right to do, it now insists on the debt being paid. The only ground for supposing that anything political influences the demand, is found in the proceedings of the Cobourg council, where it was argued that, as deputations were to be sent to both the Local and Federal governments (for Cobourg is also in debt to the Dominion), it would be wiser to send to the respective governments the political friends of each. This fact the organs have been careful to conceal; they have expended their energies in trumping up a false charge against the Mowat Government, when, if their reasoning had included the whole facts, there existed the same basis for imputing dishonest motives to the Dominion Government. But this would not jump with the tactics of Conservative journalism; it would be reasoning from facts—a political heresy which the orthodoxy of the subsidised organs is proof against.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Some Conservative journals have the assurance to claim that the establishment of the new stove works in Peterborough is due to the fostering influence of the N. P. This is going a long way to find proof of the good effects of the N. P., and is also untrue. This foundry was established in Smith's Falls and its coming to Peterborough was principally due to the wide awake enterprise of a citizen of the town, coupled with the inducement of exemption from taxation for a period of years. When advocates of a policy have to resort to straight misrepresentation, they must be hard set for arguments or firmly wedded to wicked ways.

The man Gullette who was attacked with smallpox and removed to Baker's Island, died at 7.30 Monday night. Everything that was possible was done for him. The Chief of Police will notify his friends, who reside between Montreal and Quebec at once.

On Wednesday the town was in a state of wild excitement over the liquor prosecutions which were conducted in the Town Hall by Mr. Geo. E. Henderson, county attorney, before Police Magistrate Gordon. Five hotel keepers, A. McWilliams, D. Daly, A. Parent, J. Empey and McDonald & Burlingham, were charged by Inspector Grainger, with selling liquor on Sunday last. Foster & Hilton appeared as counsel for the defendants. The hall was crowded to the doors, and at times the uproar had to be suppressed by the court. The prosecution put in the box Bayard Fritz, of Belleville, a whiskey detective, who swore that he bought and drank in the hotels named sherry, wine, beer and soda. In the court room threats of using rotten eggs and applying a coat of tar and feathers on Fretz were frequently made. The case was enlarged.

After the court adjourned the mob followed Pretz to the hotel, all the while breathing to punish him. The informer was protected by Chief of Police Hinde and the Police Magistrate who, fearing that trouble would follow his remaining in the hotel, took him in a rig and drove him to Belleville.

Under and by virtue of a judgment of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, and in the Chancery Division thereof, made in the action of HARTLEY et al., vs. BEAVIS et al., and dated the Fourth day of September, A.D., 1885, there will be offered for sale, with the approval of the Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Peterborough, at his Chambers, in the said Town of Peterborough on

at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon, the following valuable farm property viz:

The West Half of Lot Number 20, in the 10th Concession of the said Township of Otonabee,

containing one hundred acres more or less.

Upon the said property there are about 25 acres of hardwood land, the remainder thereof being cleared and under cultivation.

There are upon the said premises two barns and a log dwelling house, with woodshed attached, and a never failing well. One of said barns is frame, 40 feet x 30 feet; the other a post barn, 50 feet x 27 feet; the said dwelling house is 30 feet x 20 feet. The soil is clay or clay loam, and well adapted for raising wheat and other grains, and the property is situated in a first-class farming locality, within six miles of the Town of Peterborough.

The said premises will be sold subject to a lease thereof to Samuel Heatherly and John Heatherly, the Lessees therein mentioned, which has one year to run from 1st March, 1886 at a yearly rental of $180.00 per annum, and which said lease contains a provision that the purchaser of said premises may determine the said lease upon giving to the Lessees one month's notice in writing, and paying to said Lessees the value of any crops then upon said premises, and whatever ploughing he may have done on said premises; and a reasonable sum to pay the expenses of removal from said premises. Said lands shall also be sold subject to the condition that the current year's rent, due upon the 25th Feby., 1886, shall be paid to the now owners of said lands.

TERMS:

Ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the Vendor's Solicitors at the time of the sale, and the balance of the purchase money within 30 days thereafter without interest.

Other terms and conditions will be the standing conditions of the Court.

For other terms and particulars, apply gratis to Messrs. Hatton & Wood, Barristers, Peterborough, or E. A. Peck, Esquire, Barrister, Peterborough.

Dated at Peterborough, this 29th Sept., 1885.

Melville Millar

DESERTED LOVERS.

"Our ship! our ship! See, Henry, she is sailing away without us! What can it mean?"

The speaker, Lucy Morril, was a beautiful girl—a dark-eyed brunette; the person whom she addressed was her lover—Captain Henry Cavendish—a young man of twenty-six.

They had left the vessel in the dingey, only an hour before, to visit one of those isles of the Pacific Ocean, near which the ship was then lying "off and on."

The name of the craft was the swallow, and she was the joint property of Cavendish and of Lucy's brother. She contained a valuable cargo, which the two owners expected to dispose of at Sydney, Australia, at a profit of many thousands.

His share would, the captain had anticipated, afford him the means to commence married life with, and he had already won a promise from the sweet girl, who had accompanied her brother on the voyage, to become his wife as soon as the cargo was sold.

Now, at Lucy's exclamation, her lover, who was in a small valley, gathering flowers for her, ran to the summit of the hill on which she stood.

"Aye, what can it mean?" he cried in surprise and dismay.

The ship had made all sail, and before a fair wind, was receding from his gaze at a rapid rate.

He gesticulated—waved hat and kerchief in vain. On went the vessel, and, at last her hull was invisible, and only her upper sails could be seen.

Gradually these dipped lower and lower, until every vestige of the craft was lost to view in the distance.

The two looked at each other with blanched faces.

Here they were, left by themselves on this faraway isle of the Pacific, which they knew was out of the track of most passing vessels.

"Something is wrong," said the captain sadly. "I fear I have lost everything. I was in a fair way to be happy and prosperous. Now I am poorer than a beggar."

Tears rose in Lucy's eyes.

"I advised you not to go into partnership with my brother," she said, "but I did not believe he was dishonest. I thought he was only wild and reckless. Now I do not know what to think."

"It has spoiled our happiness," said Cavendish. "Probably we will never see the craft again, and as I am thus penniless, I cannot think of obliging you to fulfil your promise of being my wife."

For several moments Lucy's dark eyes were veiled by their long lashes; then she threw herself weeping on her lover's breast.

"Can you believe me to be so mercenary?" she said. "Oh no, Henry; I am yours the same as ever."

"But," replied Cavendish, "we have no money to live on now, if I should make you mine."

"We hardly need money here," said Lucy, smiling.

"That is true; but we will want food."

"We would want that whether we were married or not," said Lucy softly.

"And so you are willing to be my bride—to marry me now?"

"I—I—did not say so," she answered shyly. "It is for you to say."

"Who is there here to marry us?"

"True enough; but—but—I don't know—I have heard that missionaries are sometimes on there faraway islands."

"We will go and look for one," said Cavendish, offering his arm.

They had not proceeded far when they met a native—a dusky, wildly-clad man, with long black hair. He showed surprise on seeing them, and asked them many questions in broken English.

From him the lovers learned that there was a missionary on the island. He guided them to that person's house, a small building, with a thatched roof.

The missionary, an aged man, received them kindly and heard their story.

"It is seldom that vessels pass this way," he said. "I am afraid you will have to stay here for months. You will have to live principally on fruit and fish."

"Can we get plenty of that?" inquired Cavendish.

"If you have a boat, you can go out and catch all the fish you want. As to fruit, it grows wild on some parts of the isle, but to make sure of getting enough, you had better cultivate a plantation of your own."

The young man had no difficulty in inducing the missionary to perform the marriage ceremony.

Assisted by the good man, the captain then set about erecting a habitation. It was finished in a few days, and the missionary loaned the young couple a few utensils to "commence housekeeping" with. For a pocket-knife and a silver tobacco-box, one of the female natives sold to the captain half-a-dozen dresses, which she had obtained, in exchange for fruit, from the master of an English vessel that had once anchored off the island. These dresses, Lucy, who was skilful with the needle, soon altered to fit her person.

And now, while Cavendish never ceased to regret the loss of his vessel and cargo, he and his pretty wife could not help enjoying their island life. The captain eventually had a thriving plantation, on which he cultivated not only fruit, but also vegetables.

In his boat—the dingey—he would row miles away from the island to obtain fish, and often Lucy would accompany him.

Happy in each other's society, the two at last became attached to their snug little island home, which stood, with its thatched roof, perched on a rising bit of ground above the beach, where the sea waves came rolling in, white and high.

One morning, after they had lived there almost a year, Cavendish left his wife to go on one of his usual fishing excursions.

It was a calm still day, and the young man, rowing far from the isle, was soon lost to the gaze of Lucy—who was watching him—in the misty distance.

An hour later a terrific gale suddenly came sweeping over the ocean. The wind and the sea together roared with a din that was almost deafening. And it seemed to Lucy that the great waves scattering sheets of spray that filled the air like white clouds, were as high as mountains.

Terrified and anxious on her husband's account, she watched in vain for his return.

"He is lost! He is lost!" she cried, wringing her hands. "His boat could not live in a sea like that. Oh, Henry! Henry!"

The old missionary made his appearance. He strove to console her, but he could give her no hope, for he, too, could not help thinking the captain was lost.

The spray and the rack of the storm covered the raging water for miles, so that no object could at present be seen through the cloud-like curtain.

Straining their eyes to the utmost, the two anxious watchers vainly endeavored to pierce with their gaze these rushing masses of vapor.

All at once Lucy fancied she saw something like a black speck tossed and hurled along towards the island.

"See! What is it?" she gasped.

"An overturned boat," said the missionary, when the object had drifted nearer.

"It is his boat!" Lucy cried in agony.

Such was indeed the case.

Broken and battered, the dingey in which Cavendish had left the island, was at length hurled high upon the beach.

It seemed as if Lucy would lose her reason.

With wild eyes she gazed upon the boat.

Not a sound escaped her.

She stood like a statue, staring at the broken dingey, as if she could not tear herself away from the spot.

"Come, child," said the missionary; "come. It is hard, but you must try to control yourself."

"I will stay here. I will watch for his body," she groaned. "It must soon come."

But she waited in vain.

The waves refused to give her the remains of her husband.

She tottered to the little house, and, throwing herself down on a rustic lounge there, she gave way to her grief.

"To think that I will never, never see him again!" she cried. "Oh, I wish that I, too, was dead!"

There was a bright hectic color on each check, and a restless gleam in the eyes.

The words of consolation offered by the missionary fell unheeded on her ears. A delirious fever was fast taking possession of her brain.

The old missionary went outside of the house, and walked to and fro, his mournful gaze turned seaward.

The violence of the gale had now abated, and the atmosphere had cleared.

Far away the watcher beheld a large ship, apparently heading for the island.

"Here comes a vessel!" he called, hoping thus to turn the young wife's mind a little from the grief.

She was on her feet and out of the house in a moment. With eager interest did she gaze on the approaching craft.

"I know that ship!" she cried in a voice of agony. "It is my husband's and my brother's—the Swallow. But it has come too late!—too late! My Henry has gone, and I will never leave the island. I will die here, and when I die I must be buried in the sea, where he lies, and there we shall meet again."

Wildly shone her eyes as she spoke, and the missionary feared that her mind had already begun to wander.

Meanwhile on came the ship, until she was within a mile of the beach, when a boat was lowered and pulled shoreward.

As it drew nearer, there was a simultaneous cry of joy from Lucy and the missionary, for they recognized Captain Cavendish, standing in the bow, waving his hat to them.

"He has been picked up and saved!" cried Lucy's companion.

"Aye, aye, safe and well!" shouted the captain, hearing the words.

Soon after the boat's keel grated on the beach, and Lucy threw herself into her husband's arms.

"Have you no greeting for me?" said a voice near them.

Lucy looked up to see her brother, whom she had not recognized on account of his thick beard.

As the captain released her, he embraced and kissed her.

"This is indeed a happy day for me," he said. "Out in the storm, just as it commenced, I fell in with your husband, struggling in his little boat, and I was fortunate enough to pick him up. The boat, however, drifted away from us before we could secure it. Now I find my sister well and happy, still, I hope, having faith in her wild scamp of a brother."

"Why did you desert us?" inquired Lucy. "Why leave us on this island?"

"It was not I who deserted you, but the men. They rose in a mutiny, which they had probably been for some time planning, knocked me and the two mates down, tied our hands and feet, thrust us into the hold like pigs, and then clapping on sail, headed away from the island.

"Their object, as I afterwards learned, was to take the vessel to some South American port, there sell the cargo, pocket the funds, and then make off inland, leaving the craft in our possession. They were not good navigators, and, therefore, they were many months beating about the Pacific Ocean.

"At last they were within some hundreds of miles of the South American coast, but by this time half the number concluded that their plan was not a feasible one. They would, on reaching port, be boarded by the authorities, questions would be asked, and detection, it seemed, would be inevitable. They were unanimous for freeing us and returning to their duty, provided we would promise not to punish them severely for what they had already done.

"Two others did not like this proposition; the two parties quarrelled, and the end of it was that they all finally resolved to desert the vessel in a body, and make for an island they saw in the distance. They did so, first setting us at liberty. They took the launch—the best boat we had—and many useful things from the ship.

"With the cook and steward, there now were only five of us to work the ship. A few days later, however, we [illegible] the Felix Islands, off which we then lay becalmed.

"As these men wanted to go to Sydney, and would not ship until I had promised them I would make a 'straight wake' for that place, I was obliged to head in that direction, instead of retracing my course to the distant shore—a thousand miles away—on which you and Cavendish had been left.

"A fair wind favored me, and I finally arrived at Sydney, when I disposed of our cargo to a much better advantage than I had even expected. Then I shipped another crew, and headed for this isle, off which, it seems, I arrived just in time to save your husband's life. I have to add that his share of our profits is with mine, safe under lock and key, aboard ship."

A few days later, Captain Cavendish, now the fortunate possessor of many thousands, sailed away with his wife from the island. In due time the happy couple reached London, and on the outskirts of that city they erected a comfortable cottage—their future home.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Munich has the largest beer gardens and the best beer in Europe. The city runs to beer, art and music. The best beer sells for 3 cents a quart mug. It is common to see a man sit down and drain off three quart mugs at a sitting. If you see a procession of people on any street and follow it, it will take you to a beer garden.

Friend—"I should think you would know the prices of all your drugs by this time." Druggist—"Why, I do, of course." "Then how does it happen that after you filled that prescription for that gentleman you spent such a time looking over that book before you could tell him the price? You were trying to find out the cost of the drugs, weren't you?" "O, no. I was looking over a commercial directory to find out how much he could afford to pay."—Philadelphia Call.

Candor was a merit the Chancellor Kent possessed in an eminent degree, and when upon one occasion he informed an individual he detested that he was pleased to meet him, it caused a friend to express surprise that he should so diverge from his known frankness and sincerity to express pleasure at meeting such a man. "That is all right, my dear sir," replied the jurist, in his quiet, easy way. "I was glad to meet him, but I should have been very sorry if he was going our way."—Albany Express.

"Did you advertise for a man to do clipping?" asked a rural individual who had invaded the editor's sanctum. "H'm," said the Archimedes of the printing office; "you don't look like a clipper. What have you been working at?" The intruder toyed with the office shears and replied: "I've been shearing sheep." The editor turned to his yellow paper again and murmured: "You can get a chance at the brokers' offices down in State street; twelve dollars and a half a clip."

A genius has invented a cushion with a spiral spring, to be worn by skaters where it will do the most good. When a skater who wears one of these contrivances sits down unexpectedly and in italics, as it were, the spring throws him right on to his feet again, before he is fully aware that there has been an accident. The other night a young man provided with one of these inventions fell a little too hard, and the spiral spring reversed him so violently that the rebound pitched him forward and broke his nose. He will sue the inventor for $10,000 damages.—Norristown Herald.

"Can you see the stage perfectly well?" asked a gentleman at the play, leaning forward to address the young lady in front. "Why, yes, sir, perfectly," she replied, turning with some surprise. "Nothing at all in front to obstruct your view?" he persisted anxiously. "No, sir, nothing," she said, smiling pleasantly at his evident interest in her welfare. But the next minute he had an admirable illustration of the changeability of woman's temper for she flounced around indignantly and angrily tossed her disdainful head when he murmured politely: "I congratulate you."—Somerville Journal.

Two young ladies entered a cigar store and one of them said timidly: "Have you any choice cigars, sir? Want them for a present." "O yes, Miss," replied the tobacconist, "we have any choice you like from a cent a piece up." "I think I will take some of the 1-cent ones, then, if they are choice. I had no idea that choice cigars were so cheap. Won't Charlie be delighted?" she said to her companion as they left the store. "Poor boy! He is so fond of a choice cigar, and they will taste all the better," she added, with a little blush, "for having come from me."—N Y Times.

JAMES ALEXANDER.

The Daily Examiner.

FRIDAY, OCT. 30, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Dufferin Literary Association.

The regular meeting of the Dufferin Literary Association takes place this evening in the rooms of the Mechanics' Institute. The debate opens at 8 o'clock.

Police Court.

Patrick O'Brien was this morning charged before Mr. Dumble with drunkenness last night. He admitted the charge, and was allowed to depart on contributing $2 to the town finances.

Nicholl's Hospital Trust.

There will be a meeting this evening of the Board of trustees of the Nicholls Hospital, for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee in regard to the proposed regulations, and the transaction of other business.

Though Poor, Virtuous.

A late resident of Cobourg, referring to the comment in yesterday's EXAMINER in regard to the heavy criminal calendar at the Cobourg Assizes, states that out of 325 cases tried at the Assizes there during the last five years only 17 were from the town of Cobourg itself, the remainder being from the County. Though poor, the Burg is virtuous.

The Kerry Gow.

A fair audience assembled in the Opera House last evening to see the second performance of "The Kerry Gow," by the J. S. Murphy Dramatic Company. As at the first performance, an excellent presentation of the play was given, and the company is the best that has visited Peterborough this winter. If they come again and give some other Irish drama they may rest assured of having crowded houses.

The Hunters Home

The Clegg-Cameron-O'Brien et al hunting party returned home last night from the happy hunting grounds in the back townships. They had pretty fair success, having succeeded in bagging eleven fine deer. Before leaving they saw the McIntyre party fairly installed in camp and out in the woods blazing away at something at a great rate. Deer hunting tends to promote the growth of the hirsute adornment of the human face. For further particulars inquire of the "Indian Queen," George street.

Mrs. T. Charles Watson.

The Brantford Expositor says:—"Mrs. Watson is a magnificent woman, and has not developed that stagey carriage which so many elocutionists affect. Hers is an English type of beauty, and the splendid figure is only lost to sight and admiration as one meets the gaze of the soft dark eye that when required gleams like a flash of lightning, or emits a love light as tender as the most simple love-sick maiden. A number of the boxes were occupied by officers of the Dufferin Rifles in uniform, a mark of respect to the fair reader, whose husband is an officer in the Canadian militia."

A Complete Establishment.

The recent additions made to the equipment and mechanical stock of THE EXAMINER printing establishment, increases the completeness of what for a long time has been one of the best equipped printing establishments in the district, or for the matter of that, outside the large cities. The office has just received five hundred dollars worth of the latest styles of job type, adapted to circular, poster and ornamental printing. It contains the most recent issue of artistic faces put out by the leading type founding establishments of Great Britain and the United States. This, added to an already superior assortment of all kinds of type, and a first-rate mechanical equipment in every department, puts THE EXAMINER office in a leading position for filling all orders for printing of any kind and orders for ruling or book binding, in a manner superior to any establishment within reach of the public of this district. We rely upon the above statement of facts to indicate to the public where it is their interest to bestow their patronage.

In order to make room for Xmas stock, now coming in, Salisbury Bros. are offering bargains—20 to 30 per cent discount.

Behind Time.

The C.P.R. train from Toronto, which should arrive here at 11.40 a.m., was over half an hour behind time this morning, having been delayed by waiting for a connection from the west, which did not arrive on time.

English Literature.

Mr. Barton Earle will conduct a class in English Literature in connection with the Y. M. C. A., commencing Monday 16th of November at 8 o'clock. The first work to be studied will be Grey's Elegy. The fees have been placed very low, being $1 to members of the Y. M. C. A., and $2 to other gentlemen. Any gentlemen wishing to join this class, are asked to send their names at once to the Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Geo. E. Williams.

The Sudden Cold Snap.

The sudden advent of cold weather will probably make a boom in the pork market. When the frost shuts off the farmer from speeding the plough, the adipose porker may prepare for his fate. There will probably be a good deal of pork marketed in Peterborough this fall. There has been no demand of consequence for shipment to Montreal or other outside places, the cheapness of western hogs making such a speculation unprofitable. The present price for dressed hogs is $5.00 per cwt.

Criminals Wanted.

Chief Johnston has received a letter from the Chief of Police at Trenton asking him to look out for a man named Funston, alias Brownston, who escaped from the lock-up at Wooler.

Chief Constable A. D. Stewart has also communicated with him, stating that the Roman Catholic Church at Caledonia, Ont., was broken into on the 26th inst., and the Communion Service, consisting of a silver chalice pyx and ciborium, stolen. There were supposed to be four men engaged in the robbery and it is expected they will attempt to dispose of the plate in some of the towns of Eastern Ontario.

Diocesan Statistics.

His Lordship Bishop Jamot, who will pay his decennial visit to Rome next month, has been compiling, in connection therewith, statistics of his episcopal labors, from which he allows the publication of the following excerpta. During the time he has been a bishop he has administered the sacrament of confirmation 290 times in all, 220 times while Bishop of Sarepta and 70 times since he has been Bishop of Peterborough. The total number of persons to whom he has administered the sacrament is 5,758; 2,410 of whom were confirmed during his occupancy of the Bishopic of Sarepta, and 3,348 since he has come to Peterborough. The following are the places at which this sacrament has been administered and the number of recipients of it:—

What We May Expect.

Citizens to begin dumping their ashes on the sidewalks.

Brisk business in stoves, and winter clothing.

A demand for hot drinks.

Great expectations among the curling fraternity.

And jubilation among the coal and wood merchants.

The Dufferins to give the exemptions question a lively shaking up this evening.

A good entertainment at Murray Street Baptist Church this evening.

Strong northerly winds, decreasing by night; pratially clearing, colder weather.

We Would Like to Know.

If this is winter.

Who is really to blame for the delay in repairing Smith street bridge.

How the hunters up north will like this weather.

If a crossing will be laid down on McDonnell and Water streets any time this century.

How the Fire, Water and Light Committee will settle the racket about the Hunter street electric light.

How the pea nut man at the corner of Simcoe and George street finds business.

If the Dufferin debaters will find exemptions as knotty a question as it has proved to the Town Councillors.

All orders for Suits and Overcoats will be executed with neatness and despatch.

The Care of the Sick.

All ladies interested in this subject are invited to meet at St. John's school house on Wednesday, Nov. 4th, 1885, at 8 o'clock p. m., when a lecture will be given on nursing by Miss Caroline Peck, graduate of the New York Training School for Nurses, attached to Bellevue Hospital. Admission, 15 cents. Doors open at 7.30 p.m.

I WAS AFFLICTED WITH GOUTY and Chalk deposits around my joints, enlarged and inflamed; could not walk; pain was intense, particularly at the change in the weather; was confined to my bed; gave up all hopes of living; used Giles' Iodide Ammonia Liniment and Pills, which remedies restored my health, dispersed the enlargement and removed the pain. Personal.

Mr. J. J. McLaren, Q. C., of Toronto, is in town.

Mrs. Finlay, of Simcoe street, left town last evening per C.P.R. for Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mr. Hodgson, High School Inspector, is in town making an inspection of the Collegiate Institute.

Rev. F. McAmmond is recovering from a fortnight's illness, but is not yet able to resume his ministerial duties.

FURS!

As the season draws near to remind the public that the Winter will not fail to make its claim felt for warm and comfortable garments, the subscriber has made ample provision, when visiting in the early months the European Markets, to select such material for the manufacturing of FUR GOODS, which will for cheapness, durability and style, not be surpassed. Early buyers will be most liberally dealt with, as money is required for building purposes. A FINE STOCK OF HATS FOR the FALL, IN THE LATEST STYLE.

W. LECH.

BAKERS' FLOUR:

In a circular addressed to the Public some months ago, I called particular attention to the above grade of FLOUR, claiming for t unusual excellence; since then the Public have endorsed this claim with the result of a very large increase in my sale of Flour.

I still think it is unequalled by any, of a similar grade, offered Town, and respectfully solicit a still larger share of trade.

The Nicholls Hospital.

Rules and Regulations Adopted by the Board of Trustees.

A meeting was held last evening of the Board of Trustees of the Nicholls Hospital. Mr. Manson occupied the chair, and the following gentlemen were present:—Messrs. Davidson, McClelland and Poussette, and Doctors Fife and Pigeon. The committee appointed to prepare a code of regulations for the hospital submitted those given below, which were adopted.

The following are the medical gentlemen eligible for the hospital staff, if their consent to act can be secured:—Drs. W. H. Burritt, J. A. Fife, J. J. Halliday, Geo. Burnham, R. King, J. Bingham, R. P. Boucher, J. Clarke, R. W. Bell, and Hy. Pigeon.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

1. No incurable, chronic or insane cases shall be admitted to the hospital.

2. Patients shall be admitted only on an order of the Chairman or pro-Chairman and Secretary of the Trust, subject in all cases to medical examination by the medical officer in charge, but in case of accident the patient may be admitted at once and the order subsequently procured.

3. Each patient on admission, shall be examined by the medical officer in charge and a complete history of his case entered in a book specially kept for that purpose.

4. Any patient admitted to the hospital and possessing ordinary means of support, shall be required to pay fifty cents per day, payable weekly in advance, for his nursing, care and treatment.

5. Any patient occupying a private ward and employing his own physician, shall pay one dollar and twenty-five cents per day for his nursing and attendance, payable weekly in advance.

6. In special cases, a patient on admission, expressing a wish to be under the care of his own physician, may, with the consent of the medical officer in charge, have such request complied with.

7. Any patient not a resident of the town of Peterborough shall pay fifty cents per day, payable weekly in advance, for his care and treatment.

MEDICAL STAFF.

1. The medical staff shall be voluntary, and shall consist of such members of the medical profession resident in the town of Peterborough, as shall be willing to act under the hospital regulations.

2. Their attendance shall be in rotation, according to the order of their graduation, as shown upon the Register for the College of Physicians and Surgeons for Ontario, and each shall attend for one month, during which period he shall be the medical officer in charge.

3. As soon as, by death, removal or any other cause, the above staff is reduced to six, that number shall continue to be the staff of the hospital, and whenever a vacancy thereafter occurs, the same shall be filled by the appointment of the Board at its first subsequent meeting.

4. At each visit, the medical officer shall enter all prescriptions in a book kept in the dispensary for that purpose, and give such instructions as he may deem necessary to the lady superintendent and nurses, in regard to the patients.

5. Each medical officer shall enter his visit daily in the book for that purpose.

6. If any medical officer shall be temporarily prevented from attending to his duties, he shall procure some other member of the staff for a substitute.

7. No capital operation shall be performed, except in cases when delay might be dangerous, without giving notice thereof to the medical staff by the secretary, nor without the concurrence of the majority of those present, and the nature and position of the operation to be performed shall also be determined in the same manner.

8. When any patient has been in the hospital for two months, there shall be a consultation for the purpose of ascertaining whether such patient is incurable, and in the event of its being decided that he or she is incurable, such patient shall be discharged, unless the Board shall otherwise determine.

9. All medical students residing in the county of Peterborough, upon payment of $5.00 each term, not exceeding six months, in advance, shall have the privilege of visiting the patients in company with the attending Phsician, such students not being allowed in the wards at any other time, except by permission of the Medical Officer in charge, and at the expiration of the term, a certified ticket of Hospital attendance, shall be furnished him by the Secretary of the Board.

RULES FOR PATIENTS.

1. Patients on admission to the Hospital, must have a bath, unless orders to the contrary are given by the Medical attendant.

2. On admission to the Hospital wards, every patient shall deliver money and valuables and all baggage with the exception of necessary clothing, to the lady Superintendent.

3. Patients must be in their proper places in the wards at meal times and during the visits of the physicians and surgeons, and always at eight o'clock at night, and after that, perfect quiet must be observed in the wards.

4. No patient shall leave the hospital without permission from the lady Superintendant.

5. Ward patients, when able, will be expected to assist when called upon to do so by the lady Superintendent.

6. No patient shall enter the basement story, kitchen, laundry, or any of the officers' or attendants' rooms, except by permission of an officer of the Hospital.

7. No male patient's shall enter the womans ward, or any female patient the men's ward.

8. No smoking allowed in any ward or room of the Hospital except that provided for the purpose.

9. No wine, malt, liquor or any spirits shall be used by either employe or patient, except by permission of the Medical Officer in charge.

10. Any employe or patient bringing liquor in the Hospital or grounds, or found intoxication, shall be discharged.

11. Patients must be quiet and exemplary in their behaviour, conform strictly to the rules and regulations of the hospital and carry out orders and prescriptions of the various officers of the establishment. No indecent or immoral conduct will be tolerated. Loud talking or unnecessary noise in any of the wards or corridors is forbidden.

12. No estables or liquors of any kinds shall be taken into the wards by visitors. If brought by them, must be left with the lady superintendant, marked with the name of the patient for whom they are intended; to be examined by the attending physician, who will allow or refuse their use as he thinks proper.

13. When any patient misbehaves or violates any of the standing rules of the hospital, the medical officer may remove or discharge them.

14. Any unkindness or neglect of duty towards any patient, shall be reported to the lady superintendent.

15. Patients in private wards, may be visited by their friends at any suitable hours in the day time. Friends may only remain with patient over night by special permission of the Medical Officer in charge, who my, in all cases exercise discretionary powers as to admitting or excluding visitors.

RULES FOR VISITORS.

1. Visitors admitted on Wednesdays and Sundays from 2 to 4 p. m. ONLY.

2. For reasons that are obvious visitors are requested to see the nurse before entering any ward.

3. Visitors are strictly prohibited from giving any article of food, fruit or luxuries to any patient. Any luxuries (intended for particular patients) can be left with the lady superintendent, who will be glad to distribute them under direction of the medical officer in charge.

4. Visitors are requested not to interfere with the discipline of the hospital, by giving orders to the nurses or patients.

5. Visitors are requested not to converse with patients concerning their medical or surgical treatment, and particularly regarding their individual diseases.

6. At the entrance of any of the medical men into a ward, visitors will retire if necessary.

7. Visitors are requested to leave the wards promptly at 4 o'clock p. m.

8. Visitors desiring to make any complaints, will kindly communicate with the Lady Superintendent.

Lakefield.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

NEW STEAMER.

A new tug boat for Mr. Goodwin, contractor of the canal at Burleigh, arrived by rail a day or two since, and will be sent on to Burleigh to-day. Her length is 33 feet, with 10 foot beam, and she is driven by a ten horse power engine of the most improved pattern, which will give a speed of 12 miles an hour; she is very handsome, fitted up with fancy Canadian woods, and is much admired by all who have seen her; she will be placed on the waters between Lovesick rapids and Burleigh, and used to move men, etc. between the two places.

WILD GEESE.

Large numbers of wild geese have been passing over the village on their way south, more than has been seen for many years. On Wednesday a flock, which must have numbered over a thousand, was noticed, while smaller flocks were constantly to be seen and heard. It looks as if we were going to have an early closing up of our back waters.

STILL THEY GO.

A large camping party, consisting of Messrs. W. H. Casement, F. Dinwoodie, Giles Stone, T. J. Bird, J. and H. Myers, and several friends leave on Monday for two weeks' sport at Jacko Lake, where in former years they have been so successful.

MORE ROWDYISM.

On Wednesday evening some party, as yet unknown, threw a stone and broke two of the large lights in Mr. Sutton's shoe shop, but there is a good chance that the perpetrator will be discovered, as all the parties in the vicinity at the time are known, and Mr. Sutton is determined to sift the matter to the bottom; if discovered, it is hoped our magistrate will inflict such punishment as will put a stop to some of the disgraceful conduct that has occurred of late on our usually quiet streets.

SCHOOL ELECTION.

A meeting for the election of a Trustee to take the place of Dr. Armour, who has left Lakefield, was held in the council chamber on Friday, when it was moved by R. N. Graham, seconded by Dr. Caldwell,—That Mr. David Smith be elected to fill the vacancy in the School Board. There being no other nomination, Mr. Smith was declared elected by Mr. W. J. Wallace, who acted as returning officer.

LOST.

We have a sporting landlord in Lakefield, who has the happy knack (so his friends say), of meeting with frequent adventures by field or flood. While out indulging in his favorite sport last Tuesday, he with one or two friends drove over to the 8th Con. of Smith, to hunt "cotton tails;" leaving their horse at a friend's, they were soon on the runways, listening to the dogs with a promise of good sport. Our hero soon bagged "poor puss" and proceeded onward in the direction the dogs were. Time passed but no more game came in sight and it would soon be dark, so he wisely concluded to make for home. But that two acre piece of woods seemed to have no end, and an hour was spent before he arrived at a clearance and found himself in an unbroken part of the cotutry. Making his way to a house, he inquired his whereabouts, and the direction of his friends, and then for a guide; which the lady of the house was unable to furnish, but she showed him a path through the woods which the children took to school, hich would bring him out all right. Our hero started with fear, and trembling as he thought of the bears and wolves which infest the woods now so dark, and it was with a sigh of relief that he found himself in another clearance and saw the welcome light in a farm house in front. But his troubles were not to end here, for as he passed through the barn yard, a sow with a litter of pigs charged his dog who soon got out of the way, leaving his master to receive the second charge. Boniface was soon perched on top of the fence secure, while his enemy remained on guard below; things looked black. He did not like to call for help and be found in such a fix, while he did not like to shoot the mother of so numerous a family as he saw around him, and he did not relish the idea of roosting all night on the sharp top rail. Fortunately the old lady changed her mind and marched off, so that our friend was enabled to get down and again inquire as to his whereabouts, which was satisfactory, and in a few moments he had rejoined one of his friends who had waited for him, and half an hour later over a bottle of "blue ribbon beer" had well nigh forgotten his troubles of the day.

Failure Feared.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—The opinion prevails in Bulgaria that the Balkan Conference will prove a failure. The country longs for peace, but it has enough to maintain in an army during the winter without contracting loans.

Gladstone's Glottis.

Gladstone paid a flying visit to London yesterday to consult a throat specialist. He is still a little hoarse.

Spain Favored.

The Post's correspondent at Rome states on the best authority that the Pope has decided entirely in favor of Spain in the Carolines question.

The Union Must be Maintained.

The Marquis of Hartington has issued an electoral address, in which he says that it is imperative that the union of Great Britain and Ireland be maintained at any price. He says, however, that he is prepared to support measures looking to the extension of self-government and shall still vote with the Liberal party. He favors an inquiry into the subjects of taxation and education, and says explicitly that he is prepared to grant local self-government to Ireland.

Greeks Greedy for Gore.

ATHENS, Oct. 30.—M. Tricoupis, ex-Prime Minister, arrived here yesterday. He received an ovation from thousands of citizens, who clamored for war. He replied in a moderate circumspect speech. The Government continues to send troops to the frontier.

A Big Failure.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—The liabilities of Premsel, the banker who attempted to commit suicide, are $1,200,000. A large firm at Berlin which accepted bills to the amount of $200,000 from Premsel, has failed.

The End Not Yet.

The trial of Stead and the other defendants in the Armstrong abduction case was resumed to-day. Justice Lopes, replying to a question from the jury as to when the case would end, said they might as well ask the date of the day of judgment.

"AND THEY ALL BEGIN MAKING EXCUSES."

The more the Conservative organs attempt to explain away Sir Leonard Tilley's deficit, the more they "put their foot in it." The Mail uses the extraordinary logic that the revenue is a million dollars greater than last year, and that it is merely the expenditure that has increased, and that there is no actual deficit. If the Mail and other apologists for the government take the position that the expenditure has increased over three millions in one year they are welcome to to all the glory they can extract from the wriggle. Some organs pretend to attribute the excess of expenditure to the cost of the Northwest rebellion. They have continually been underrating the expense of our little outbreak, but according to this reasoning they must consider it equivalent to the amount of the deficit. Suppose that the rebellion accounts for the deficit, who is to be held responsible for the outbreak. Plainly the Dominion Government, by their oppression of the settlers, who were dispossessed of their lands that the latter might be bestowed on Government parasites and favourites. Even some of the staunchest friend, of the government freely admit this. Let the organs travel in a circle of squirming argument, they must return to the starting point, that is the point, where all the facts indicate the government's reckless extravagagance and shameful corruption as responsible for the yawning hiatus in our finances. Still another set of organs lay the blame of the deficit upon the general depression and the failure of the wheat crop. Here they are again forging chains to bind themselves. In 1878 the people were made to believe that they could make themselves rich by submitting to high taxation; that, if they adopted the N.P., farmers would have good crops and perpetual high prices; that such would be the influence of the N.P. that "hard times should come again no more," and that, as the Guelph Mercury puts it, the N.P. would be another Joshua, that would cause the sun of prosperity to stand still and shine for Canada while all the world was involved in the gloom and darkness of general depression. Turn which way they will, squirm as they may, the Government organs cannot escape the conclusion that, though they have loaded down the taxpayers like beasts of burden; have bled them at every vein, yet they have fed and fattened their supporters with the outwrung taxes of the toiling millions, they have squandered the public funds in buying themselves political support. Their extravagance and corruption have involved the country in such a serious financial complication that Sir Leonard Tilley is fain to desert what he considers a sinking ship, leaving to his successor the burden of a tremendous debt, and the enjoyment of the ripening fruit of a rotten fiscal policy, of a sham system of enriching the country by high taxation. Attempt to explain away the facts as the organs may, the fact remains that this year our expenses over-run our revenue, great as it is, by two and a quarter millions, though the actual deficit is more like four millions.

The Reformers of the county of Victoria are full of vigorous political life, and are determined that the people shall be informed upon the political issues of the day from the mouths of the prominent men of the party. Last week a mass meeting was held in the Opera House, Lindsay, in connection with the county convention, which was addressed by Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education. The Lindsay Post, with its characteristic enterprise, gives a capital nine-column report of this masterly address. In it Hon. Mr. Ross detailed in an exhaustive manner the magnificient record of the Mowat Administration, involving wise and liberal expenditure, made in the public interest alone. He showed how the administration of Hon. Mr. Mowat had tended to develop the vast resources of the province of Ontario; how wisely, well and economically the afflicted and unfortunate of the province had been cared for. He amply justified the course of the government on the school book question, and pointed out that the party, which raises the false cry of "monopoly" is the party that created a real monopoly of $150,000,000 or $160,000,000 in the Canadian Pacific Railway. The speech bristled with facts and was hailed with enthusiasm and delight by the large audience. Mr. Wm. Patterson, M.P., also addressed the meeting, and the Post promises a full report of his address in its next issue.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Our big cotem., the Globe, rather resents our remarks respecting the condition of Toronto's municipal matters. We admit our inability to do justice to the subject.

Sir Leonard Tilley is a prudent man. Previous to departing this (political) life he erected a monument to himself, costing—the country—over two and a half million dollars.

It is well to be distinguished for something. To Sir Leonard Tilly, Sir John's Finance Minister, belongs the credit of piling up the largest deficit since Confederation.

Amidst all the glib talk of disestablishing the English Church, it will be of interest to know that this body gives evidence of a vigorous life, by having spent one hundred and twenty-five millions of dollars in England alone in church building during the past 44 years.

N. P. journals claim that St. Thomas, which has increased in population seven per cent. during the seven years' "prosperity" of the National Policy, has so grown as the result of high taxation. How do they explain that St. Thomas, during the six previous years, increased in population fifteen per cent?

Stormy Nights in the Lighthouse.

"Yes, we see and hear some curious things, said the lighthouse keeper, "and as for monotony, its enough to drive one mad. Married men fare better, as, when women and children are around, it isn't quite so lonesome; but it's bad enough. My station for a number of years was a rock about two hundred feet long and one hundred feet wide, and in a gale of wind the house stood right in the water, with the seas rolling all around.

"Yes, it was shaky. One night I call to mind especially. It had been blowing a gale for two days; the sea was making a clean breach over the ledge, and every time it hit the house it would jump 60 or 100 feet into the air and come down on the roof like rocks. On the ledge were four or five bowlders that must have weighed over two tons, and the first thing we knew one of them fellows came at the door, burst it in, and in a second we were all a-swimming. The stone couldn't get in; it just stuck there, so we took to the light and sat on the stairs, and nigh froze to death, all night. Me and my man took turns in going up every half hour, and d'ye know, the light house swung so that you could hardly keep your feet. I thought more than once that we'd go over, but she didn't. The feeling is different from most anything else. There is a shaking and vibrating all the time, and then when you feel the big gusts come you can feel the whole thing tremble and quiver, so that you'd almost lose your feet.

"One night," continued the speaker, "I remember some fishermen got blowed off shore and came in there, and what a night it was! About midnight some one sings out 'The lamp's out.' And so it was. Up we rushed, half a dozen of us, scared to death, as ten minutes might cost a good many lives and a vessel could come within twenty feet of our house before she struck. By the time we got up we found the place full of smoke and see something had fouled the chimney, and what d'ye suppose it was? You'd never guess. It was blowing fit to take the buttons off your coat; but someone had to get outside and climb up the rod on to the very top of the light and see what was the trouble. It was a close call, and we tossed for it. My mate drew and started. We tied a rope around him and up he went and did the job.

"He came back alive, but with the whitest face I ever saw on a live man. He said he wouldn't do it again for love or money.

"But what d'ye suppose he found in the chimney, stuck fast? Nothing more nor less than one of these 'ere Mother Carey's chickens, jammed in as tight as it could get, and dead, of course. We get regularly pelted with birds in the light, and that is the reason the glass is made so thick, as almost every night one or two birds hit against it. Sometimes in the spring and fall hundreds of 'em will strike in the course of a night. You see at this time the birds are migrating and flying off shore along the coast, and on foggy nights they only see the blaze of the light. They make a break for it, and down they go, and in the morning the rail, iron and glass will be all blood and feathers."—Rockport (Mass.) Letter in the Philadelphia Times.

THE MYSTERIOUS HAND.

Do not think for a moment that I could ever have seen anything superhuman in the occurrence. I do not believe in any but normal causes. If, however, instead of using the word "supernatural" to express what we do not understand, we should use the word "inexplicable," it would be much more exact. In the affair I am about to relate, it was, above all, the preceding and attending circumstances that impressed me. I will give you the facts.

I was examining magistrate at the time at Ajicco, a little white city lying on the edge of a beautiful bay which is surrounded on all sides by high mountains. The cases with which I had chiefly to do were those of vendetta. I had some fierce, heroic instances, the most superbly dramatic possible. Among those people were found the most glorious causes for revenge that men could dream of—secular hatreds, appeased for a moment, but never extinguished, traitorous ruses, assassinations, developed into massacres, and almost glorious in their horror. For two years I had heard of nothing but the price of blood, that terrible Corsican prejudice which binds a man to avenge every injury on the person who wrought it, his descendants and kinsmen. I have seen old men murdered and children, and my head was full of such stories.

I learned one day that an Englishman had just leased for a number of years a little villa at the foot of the bay. He had brought with him a French body-servant, engaged at Marseilles as he passed. Everybody was soon busy with this strange personage, who lived alone, and left his dwelling only to hunt or fish. He spoke to nobody, never came to the city, and every morning practiced shooting for an hour or two with his pistol or rifle.

There were many stories about him. One man held that he was of princely rank, and had fled his country for political reasons; another affirmed that he was lying in concealment after having committed a fearful crime, and even related particulars of an especially horrible nature.

I wished, in my capacity of examining magistrate, to obtain some definite information in regard to this man; but I could learn nothing. He gave his name as Sir John Rowell. I took satisfaction in watching him near at hand, but no one could point out to me anything really suspicious about him.

Since, however, the rumors concerning him continued, increased, and became more general, I resolved to make an attempt to see the stranger myself, and I began to hunt regularly in the neighborhood of his estate.

I waited long for my opportunity. It came finally in the shape of a partridge which I shot and killed in the Englishman's face. My dog brought it to me, but taking the game in my hand I went to excuse my lack of good manners and beg Sir John Rowell to accept the bird.

He was a large man, with red hair and beard, very tall and very robust, a sort of placid and polished Hercules. He had nothing of the so-called British stiffness, and thanked me cordially, speaking with strong English accent, for my scrupulousness. At the end of a month we had talked five or six times together.

One evening as I was passing his door I saw him in his garden smoking his pipe, astride of a chair. I saluted him, and he invited me in to take a glass of beer with him. I did not wait to be asked twice.

He received me with scrupulous English courtesy, eulogized France and Corsica, and declared that he was warmly attached to that country and to that particular portion of the coast.

I then, with great caution and under the guise of a very lively personal interest, ventured a few questions regarding his life. He replied without embarrassment, telling me that he had traveled extensively in Africa, India, and America, and that he had had many adventures.

I then returned to the subject of the chase, and he gave me many of the most curious details in regard to hunting the hippopotamus, the tiger, the elephant, and even the gorilla.

I remarked that all these animals were formidable.

He smiled.

"Oh, no; man is the most torrible."

He laughed outright, with a hearty, contented English laugh, as he further informed me:

"I have also been a great hunter of men."

Then h turned the conversation to the topic of arms, and invited me to the house to look at guns of different kinds.

His drawing-room was hung with black silk embroidered with gold. Large yellow flowers, rioting over the dark background, shone like fire. He explained that it was a Japanese fabric.

But, in the middle of the largest panel, a strange object drew my eye. On a square of red velvet a black object was thrown into relief. It was a hand—a human hand. Not a skeleton hand, white and clean, but a dried and blackened hand, with yellow nails, naked muscles, and traces of blood—old, clotted blood, where the bones were cut short off as if with the blow of an ax, about midway up the forearm. An enormous iron chain, riveted at the wrist, soldered to this unsightly member, attached it to the wall by a ring strong enough to hold an elephant in leash.

"What is that?" I asked.

"That is my worst enemy," replied the Englishman, calmly. "He came from America. It was cut off with a sabre, skinned, and dried in the sun for a week. It was a pretty good piece of work for me."

I touched that human fragment, which must have belonged to a giant. The fingers, disproportionately long, were attached by enormous tendons, to which shreds of skin still clung. Scorched as it was, it was a frightful thing to behold, suggesting irresistably some savage revenge.

"He must have been a very strong man," said I.

"Oh, yes," said the Englishman, gently. "But I was stronger than he. I had that chain put on to hold him."

I thought he was jesting, and said:

"The chain is wholly useless now; the hand will not run away."

But he gravely replied:

"The chain was necessary. It was always trying to get away."

With a rapid glance I questioned his countenance, asking myself:

"Is he a lunatic or an ugly jester?"

But his face remained impenetrable, calm, and benevolent. I talked of other things, and admired his guns. I noticed that three loaded revolvers lay on the tables, as if this man lived in constant fear of an attack.

I visited him several times and then went there no more. People had become accustomed to his presence and had grown indifferent.

A whole year passed. Then one morning, toward the end of November, my servant awoke me with the announcement that Sir John Rowell had been assassinated in the night.

Half an hour later, with the central commissary and a captain of soldiery, I entered the Englishman's house. His servant, bewildered and despairing, was weeping before the door. I suspected him at first, but he was innocent. The guilty man never could be found.

As I entered Sir John's sitting-room, I saw at the first glance his body stretched out on its back in the middle of the floor. His waistcoat was torn, one torn sleeve of his coat was hanging; all told that a terrible struggle had taken place.

He had died of strangulation! His terrible countenance, black and swollen, seemed to express an abominable fear; he held something between his set teeth, and his neck, pierced in a hundred spots, as if with iron points, was covered with blood.

A physician joined us. He examined long and closely the marks of fingers in the flesh of the dead man's throat and spoke these strange words:

"One would say that he had been strangled by a skeleton."

A shudder crept over my back, and I raised my eyes to the wall, to the place where I had formerly seen the horrible, shriveled hand. It was no longer there. The chain hung broken.

Then I leaned over the dead man, and found in his distorted mouth one of the fingers of that missing hand, cut, or rather sawed, off by his teeth close to the second joint.

They proceeded to make investigations, but discovered nothing. No door or window had been forced, no article of furniture moved. The two watchdogs had not been awakened.

The testimony of the servant could be summed up in a few words.

His master had seemed agitated for a month past. He had received and burned many letters. Often seizing a horsewhip, with fury that resembled madness, he had lashed that dried hand chained to the wall, which had been removed, no one knew how, at the very hour of the crime.

It was his habit to retire early at night and to lock himself in with care. He always had weapons within his reach. He often talked very loud in the night, as if quarreling with somebody.

That night it chanced that he had made no sound, and it was only on coming to open the windows in the morning that the servant had found Sir John assassinated. He suspected nobody.

I reported to the magistrates and public officers all I knew about the death, and a minute inquiry was prosecuted over the whole island. Nothing was discovered.

One night, about three months after the crime, I had a fearful nightmare. I seemed to see that hand, that horrible hand, running like a scorpion or a spider over my curtains and walls. Three times I awoke, and three times on going to sleep again I saw the hideous member running about my room, moving its fingers like feet.

The next day it was brought to me. It had been found in the cemetery on the grave of Sir John Rowell. The forefinger was gone.

Had I an explanation to suggest it would but overthrow your wild imaginings, and would not be likely to find acceptance with you. My belief is simply that the lawful owner of the hand was living, and had come in search of it with the one that remained to him. But I have not been able to picture to my satisfaction the manner of his revenge.—From the French.

"Who is that man applauding so vociferously near the front?" asked a friend of a theatrical manager on the first production of a play in an uptown theater. "That long-haired man with a light-colored coat?" "Yes." "He—he's the author of the play."

A German has succeeded in accurately photographing a flash of lightning. In order not to be behind the achievements of the effete monarchies of the Old World, an American has caught a life-like photograph of a clap of thunder, and is now experimenting on the rumble of the earthquake.

He—"Did you go the first night? She—"Oh, yes; we always do. It is so delightfullly amusing, is it not?" He—"What, you thought the piece good, then?" She—"Oh, the piece! I really did not take much notice. Don't you think, by the way, it would be much better without a piece at all?"

Enchanting Prospect.

Dear little head with brown waves rippling over
Sweetest brown eyes that ans under the sun,
Velvety lips that are fresh as the clover,
Ah! when I praise I can never have done!

For straightway I think of the chin with its dimple,
So cunning that it plays hide and seek in the snow,
And her voice like a brook with its apple and wimple,
And her cheek like a rose in its exquisite glow.

Her step is as light as the dewfall at even;
And her form, ah! so daintily airy and slight,
That she seems like a star-seraph wandering from Heaven
To the house that without her were darker than night.

As deftly her housewifely tasks she is plying,
A love-song's gay lilt to her rosy lip springs,
And in time to the measure white fingers are flying
O'er a thousand wise, womanly, delicate things.

O, bonny brown head! do you know that your shining
Makes all the world's light for my worshiping eye?
That around you each hope of my life is entwining,
As I patiently wait for your husband to die?

Gilbert's Latest.

[In Gilbert and Sullivan's new comic opera, "The Princess Ida," the following song is sung by "Gama," the Philanthropist King, who has a crooked leg, a club foot and a hunchback.]

If you will give me your attention, I will tell you what I am:
I'm a genuine philanthropist—all other kinds are sham.
Each little fault of temper and each social defect
In my erring fellow creatures I endeavor to correct.
To all their little weaknesses I open people's eyes,
And little plans to snub the self-sufficient I devise;
I love my fellow creatures, I do all the good I can,
Yet everybody says I'm such a disagreeable man!
And I can't think why!

To compliments inflated I've a withering reply,
And vanity I always do my best to mortify—
A charitable action I can skillfully dissect,
And interested motives I'm delighted to detect—
I know everybody's income and what everybody earns,
And I carefully compare it with the income tax returns;
But to benefit humanity however much I plan,
Yet everybody says I'm such a disagreeable man!
And I can't think why!

I'm sure I'm no ascetic, I'm as pleasant as can be;
You'll always find me ready with a crushing repartee;
I've an irritating chuckle, I've a celebrated sneer;
I've an entertaining snigger, I've a fascinating leer;
To everybody's prejudice I know a thing or two;
I can tell a woman's age in half a minute—and I do.
But, although I try to make myself as pleasant as I can,
Yet everybody says I'm such a disagreeable man!
And I can't tell why!

Keeping House in a Car.

A German bootmaker resides in a car now stationed in the center of a blank lot on Nineteenth street, near Diamond. He has done so during the last three months. His residence, if not genteel, is clean both inside and out. It cost him upwards of $25, to which must be added something for repairs. It is partitioned off so as to afford convenience as a shop as well as a home. On entering, the visitor sees a counter with a seat on each side of the doorway. Beyond the counter is the repairing compartment, where the tenant pursues his work industriously. Another partition divides the extremity, leaving space for a roughly-made seat, which is also used as a bed. The interior has but little left of the car's ancient trappings. Ingenuity has demolished them or covered them over with boards and paint. The exterior alone indicates the origin of this unique cabin. The coating of red and blue paint is faded and dirty; its windows are decayed, for the most part unglazed, and in several cases badly mended. One curious feature about it is that in addition to a sign-board indicating the kind of trade conducted within, there is one worded thus: "Jewelry and Watches." The cobbler endeavors to sell trinkets when opportunity occurs, which must be seldom. Few of the pedestrians likely to cross that lot will dream of purchasing jewelry or watches at such an unpromising store. The old man is chatty, polite, and is said to be a capital hand at repairing shoes.

"You seem to be comfortable here," remarked a visitor yesterday.

"Yes, oh yes," he replied, proceeding to explain in broken English that things were all square and satisfactory during the summer weather.

"You don't pay much rent here?"

"No; $1 a month."

"Have you much trade?"

"Yes, plenty. The doctor over there gives me all his jobs and lots of people 'round here come to me with their repairing."

"Sell much jewelry—many watches?"

"No," he said shortly, with an ominous shake of the head.—Philadelphia Times.

The Skeleton in Most Closets.

Few h uses have as many closets as the ladies like, yet, in deference to the known fact that they will always try to induce their husbands to take a house with seven closets in preference to one with six, they usually have more than the landlord likes.

Closets are not always innocent from a sanitary point of view. Many things which it would be disagreeable to have in a bedroom are packed away in the closet; the housekeeper forgets all about them for months, and they are often treasuries of moth and mold. The closet reserved for the soiled linen of the family is the worst one. Dr. Benjamin Richardson has very truly said that a people which was really civilized would have a thoroughly ventilated room set apart for the entire family to undress in, where the clothes could be hung upon rods and thoroughly purified by draughts of cold air during the night. From these remarks the conclusion may be drawn that closets in which clothes are kept ought to be ventilated.—Philadelphia Record.

Horticultural Society.

A meeting of the above Society was held yesterday afternoon at the Bank of Toronto, the President, Mr. J. H. Roper, in the chair. The conditions on which the public will be admitted to the enjoyment of Court House Part was discussed, and, the season being so far advanced, it was decided to withdraw the draft by-law submitted to the town council on the subject. The Treasurer's statement of finances was read and an order given for the planting of a number of ornamental trees and shrubs in the spring.

Improvements.

The appearance of the town has been much improved during the past summer by the construction of boulevards on many streets, and the good work is still going on. Mr. John Cousins, who is a specialist in this line, has just completed a boulevard in front of Councillor Davidson's residence, on Dalhousie street. No doubt other dwellers on the street will be led to follow suit. On Sherbrook street Mr. G. Stethem has thrown down the high board fence in front of the his handsome grounds, and is substituting a terrace of turf and a light steel fence, the latter an importation from Cincinnati, Ohio, This will give passers by an opportunity of sharing with their fortunate onwer the pleasure derived from viewing the beauty of his picturesque premises.

The Study of English Literature.

When Mr. Grinder passed through the cosy parlor where young Tom Spooner was visiting his daughter a few evenings ago, Miss Mary Grinder was demurely seated near the window, while her visitor was descanting to her in glowing terms on the beauties of Tenneyson's poetry, a volume of which he held in his hand, and indeed a more decorously behaved and intellectually occupied pair of young lovers could hardly be imagined. When the old gentlemen rejoined Mrs. Grinder in the dining room, where she was raking out the ashes of the fire, and laying the kindling ready for the morning, he remarked to her what a nice, quiet young fellow Spooner was. "Yes," said the old lady, "and so devoted to literature, I'm sure that his society will be very beneficial to Mary."

The worthy couple were about to retire for the night, when a loud crash in the parlor brought the old gentlemen into that apartment under the impression that in spite of the newly passed town by-law, a dynamite cartridge had somehow got loose there. All was quiet, however; young Spooner was still expatiating on the beauties of Tennyson' and the young lady, at a respectable distance, was listening with great interest to his well rounded sentences. But the old gentleman's keen eye did not fail to notice that the arm of the big chair in the corner was broken off, and, having in his young days been there himself, he tumbled to the true situation in a moment.

"Mr. Spooner," said he, "that chair was never calculated to hold two people, and as it seems you and Mary can't be comfortable on separate seats, you'd better go home now and call again next week, and I'll have Bellegheem, the furniture man on Hunter street, build a chair big and strong enough (for his work is always strong) to accommodate the pair of you." Mr. Spooner went, but he never returned to test Bellegheem's big chair, and the fair Miss Grinder thinks life is not worth living, and is looking for a new exponent of English literature.

In order to make room for Xmas stock, now coming in, Sailsbury Bros. are offering bargains—20 to 30 per cent discount.

Best of the Season.

To all appearances the most refined and best entertainment of the season will be that on Tuesday night next, when Mrs. Watson will appear for the first time before a Peterborough audience.

The Slippery Sidewalks.

The slippery condition of the sidewalks yesterday made pedestrianism extremely dangerous, and many minor accidents happened. Mrs. Thomas Johnson, a widow lady, met with one of a rather serious character. While on her way to her son's residence in the south ward, yesterday morning, she slipped and fell heavily, breaking her forearm. The services of Dr. King were called in, and the fracture set, and Mrs. Johnson is doing as well as could be expected.

Hallowe'en.

This evening is All Hallow's Eve, or, as it is more generally known, Hallowe'en, an occasion when, in addition to a number of harmless indoor amusements, young people divert themselves by detaching gates from their proper positions and by a variety of other pranks, which, though they seem to afford unbounded satisfaction to the youthful perpetrators, are a sore cause of annoyance to the harrassed householder. Keep your boys at home to-night and put a chain round your gate and gate post.

Market Items.

The market this morning was not quite so large as that of last week, the sudden cold snap probably keeping back some of the attendants. Instead of occupying the usual position around the old Town Hall, the goodwives who sell butter and eggs were to-day installed in warmer quarters upstairs in the hall. Butter was selling at 21c., eggs 18c. and 19c., potatoes 60c. per bag, apples from 65c. and upwards. Pork fetched 5c. and 6c., beef 6c. and 7c., and lamb 7c. and 8c. per pound.

All Saints at St. John's.

To-morrow being All Saints Day and the 3rd anniversary of the restoration of St. John's Church there will be special services held there. Holy Communion will be administered at half past eight in the morning and there will be morning prayers with choral litany and Holy Communion service at 11 o'clock. At the evening service there will be special anthems. During the offertory at morning service the solo, "Who Hath This World's Good," by Calkin, will be taken by Miss A. Errett. The Koyrie to be used at the communion service is a composition of Mr. Hampshire's. Appropriate processional and other hymns will be used, and in the evening the anthem will be, "What are These?" The chant for the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis will be Tours in F.

The Dufferin Debates.

The regular meeting of the Dufferin Literary Association was held last evening in the Mechanic's Institute Rooms, the President, Mr. J. H. Long, in the chair. A spirited debate on the question "Resolved that tax exemptions should be abolished," was entered into, the affirmative being maintained by Messrs. E. A. Peck, C. R. Armstrong, W. Packenham, and F. W. Scott, while Messrs. A. Clegg, J.E McIlmoyle and A. Stevenson made the negative argument. At the conclusion of the debate, the President decided that the weight of argument rested with the affirmative. The subject for the debate next Friday evening shows that the Association are progressive in their ideas. It is, "Resolved that independence is preferable to our present system of government.

Church Entertainment.

A very pleasant entertainment was given last evening in the school room of Murray Street Baptist Church, in aid of the funds of the Sunday School. The attendance was very good, and the ladies and gentlemen who took part in the entertainment acquitted themselves in a highly creditable manner. The following is the programme:—

PROGRAMME.

Hymn	The Choir
Piano Forte Duet	Mrs. and Miss Duff
Reading	Miss Ellsworth
Duet and Chorus	Miss Minore and Miss Yelland
Piano Forte Solo	Miss Fairweather
Song	Miss Huston
Reading
Piano Forte Solo	Miss Gilmour

Duet (Vocal)	Miss Huston and Mr. Duff
Reading	Mr. Duff

National Anthem.

These entertainments will be held monthly during the winter.

What they are Saying.

Exemptions must go.—The Dufferin Literary Association.

Hallow E'en.—The youngsters.

The school is in a very satisfactory condition.—High School Inspector Hodgson.

We Would Like to Know.

How the Dufferin debaters will settle the Independence question.

What Rev. I. Tovell will say to the young men to-morow evening.

And if the girls wont go to hear it.

What We May Expect.

Well attended services at St. John's church to-morrow.

The ladies to wear their seal sacques.

And gentlemen to be hunting out their fur hats.

Large numbers of citizens to have venison for dinner to-morrow.

Rev. Dr. Wild, having had his salary augmented by $1,000 per annum, to become more of a prophet than ever.

And to say that he could have foretold it by measurements taken in the great pyramid.

Light to moderate winds, fair weather, stationary or slightly higher temperture.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

A Rejoinder to "X."

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—Your correspondent "X," of yesterday, seems terribly excited over the letter on "The Scott Act Scrutiny," by Mr. Geo. E. Williams. Mr. William's letter, like a cold stream of truth, seems to have been poured on to a hot bed of coals of prejudice, producing a terrible fizz. I notice that as soon as "X" seized his pen with a "fanatic's" hand, he was capable of "sneers" and "misrepresentations." The "Scott Act Scrutiny" I leave with Mr. Williams to further deal, if he think best to do so, but I want, unknown to Mr. Williams, to take exceptions to "X's" attack on the character and standing of the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and also secretary of the Scott Act Association.

I wish to tell "X" that Mr Williams is a responsible and not "irresponsible" person. He has a sound mind, is a citizen, and is under the same laws as all ordinary citizens are. His pursuit is a legitimate one and attacked by no "intelligent and respectable" citizen. He is not a "religious parasite or fungus" but is one of a class of Christian workers, recognised by the Christian people throughout the world as being pre-eminently useful, in saving young men from vice and folly, and as a class they have had the sympathy of some of the noblest men of the world—not the least of whom being the late Earl of Shaftesbury. Mr. Williams may not pay "taxes" but he may be loyal to British law, and devoted to the nation's good, and I would remind "X" that there is something more than mere taxes to pay in order to be regarded as a citizen—obedience to law being the highest type of tax exacted from any people. Paying taxes does not atone for selling on Saturday night and all day Sunday, and sending it up on dumb slides to an upper room. "X" had better pitch into those who are taxed for obedience to law and don't pay it.

Yours truly,
Y and Z.

"Mrs. Watson, apart from a beautiful face and figure, which naturally predispose one in her favor, is a great reader in every sense of the word."—Ottawa Free Press.

A Choice Selection.

Fair, VanEvery & Coy's. importation this season of Scotch Tweeds for Suits, Naps and Beavers for Overcoats, Mantle and Ulster Cloths, are meeting with ready sale, and are being made up in best styles by their experienced cutter. All orders for Suits and Overcoats will be executed with neatness and despatch.

The Care of the Sick.

All ladies interested in this subject are invited to meet at St. John's school house on Wednesday, Nov. 4th, 1885, at 8 o'clock p. m., when a lecture will be given on nursing by Miss Caroline Peck, graduate of the New York Training School for Nurses, attached to Bellevue Hospital. Admission, 15 cents. Doors open at 7.30 p.m.

Fire at Fraserville.

A large building at Fraserville, owned by Mr. Joshua Robertson of this town, and occupied as a general grocery store and post-office by Mr. Alexander Stewart, was totally destroyed by fire last night. Mr. Stewart's stock, consisting of groceries, dry goods, &c., was valued at from $1,500 to $2,000; the value of the building is at present unknown. There was only a partial insurance on building and stock.

The Danger Past.

The members of the O'Connor family who were vaccinated on the day the smallpox case appeared in the household, have all been vaccinated and "it has taken splendidly." This indicates that the vaccine virus has protected them, after direct exposure to the disease, and that there is not the slightest danger of the disease spreading to any other members of the household, beyond the infant first attacked, which is rapidly recovering. So our little smallpox scare ends. It would be fortunate if our board of health could as successfully insure the town against danger of contagion from Montreal.

Personal.

Mr. Robert Shannon, of this town, left to-day for the flourishing village of Campbellford where he intends opening a grocery store in the Shields premises, which he has purchased. Mr. Shannon's enterprise and courtesy which have made him so popular here, will no doubt insure for him a large share of public patronage in his new home.

Mr. J. E. Hodgson, Inspector of High Schools, having concluded his inspection of the Institute here, left for home last evening. Before leaving he expressed himself in highly complimentary terms as to the general character of the work being done in the Institute, and paid some very high individual compliments to the teachers, who are glad at having the ordeal over.

Lindsay.

At the recent meeting of the County Reform Association, Mr. John McLennan, who has been appointed Sheriff of Victoria, handed in his resignation as President of the Association. The election of officers resulted as follows:—

SOUTH AND WEST VICTORIA.—President, W. Eyres, Mariposa, (Cannington P. O.); Vice-President, F. C. Taylor, Lindsay; Secretary-Treasurer, C. D. Barr, Lindsay.

NORTH AND EAST VICTORIA.—President, Jas. Dickson, Fenelon Falls; Vice-President, Edward Lytle, Victoria Road; Secretary-Treasurer, A. C. Graham, Victoria Road.

Resolutions endorsing the course and policy of Hon. Edward Blake and Hon. Oliver Mowat, and condeming the extravagance and corruption of the Dominion Government, were also adopted.

A Depredator Apprehended.

Chief Johnston took the Court House Park cow in custody at 1 o'clock to-day. On the way to the pound the horticultural bovine made a break for liberty—the race was an exciting one, but after a brilliant dash the chief won by a horn, and his prey is now in durance vile.

Work Begun.

This morning workmen broke ground on the excavation for the cellars for the extension reaward of the portion of the Henthorn estate shops, formerly occupied by Smith's market and the "ten cent store." It is proposed to deepen these shops, raise them another story and generally to restore them. The work will be done this fall if the fine weather holds.

What they are Saying.

This is Indian Summer—Everybody but the coal and wood dealers.

Winter rates begin on the railroads to-day. —The shippers.

And our new time table, too.—Mr. C.P.R. McNicholl.

The empty pews got the most of the sermon last night.—All the preachers.

But "Kerry Gow" packed the Opera House, and it more than rained, the first night.—J. S. Murphy.

And there was a "silver collection," too. —The young man that "broke" himself buying two seats.

Why didn't THE EXAMINER mention the beautiful new bully-gard I put down forninst the Skating Rink?—Johnny Cousins.

What We May Expect.

A lively School Board meeting to-morrow evening.

More rain to-morrow, it being Tuesday.

And more mud, if possible.

This fine weather to revive the house-cleaning mania.

A hot innings on the green board at the Grand Central to-night.

Hartley to be kept busy alloting seats for the winning Watson's readings.

The crop of candidates to begin to sprout soon.

Strong winds and moderate gales between south-west and north-west, clearing, colder weather towards night, preceded by light rain or sleet in most places.

We Would Like to Know.

Why no funny paper has not, in writing of vaccination, horrified us with "arm-a virumque cano.

Why Inspector Beavis hasn't tapped the peripatitic pea-nut merchant for a license fee.

And if the latter, as a new industry, is not exempt from taxation.

If the illuminated pumpkin perched on the crest of the roof of the George street, was a Hallowe'en joke.

If the promised visit of the Port Hope polo people will be a cause for Thanksgiving.

A Child's Fatal Plaything.

ST. THOMAS, County of St. Hyacinthe, Que., Oct. 29.—On Sunday morning last while Mr. J. Fournier was at church, his son, aged 9 years, began to play with his father's loaden gun. His younger sister tried to snatch the gun, when the charge went off and lodged in her breast, killing her instantly.

Emigration Epidemic.

Large Numbers of French-Canadians Flocking to the Temiscaming Region—A Land of Promise.

The land fever that has broken out in the Province of Quebec has reached Ottawa, Hull, and the surrounding districts. The French-Canadians thereabouts are enthusiastic over the prospects held out to them by the Temiscaming Colonization Society, whose lands are said to cover an area of two hundred thousand square miles, extending northwest from the shores of Lake Temiscaming. Quite a number of families have left this district and settled in the new colony. The lands along the shores of Lakes Nasbinsing and Nipissing, in the Province of Ontario, are also being rapidly filled with settlers from the neighborhood of Joliette and Quebec county. The attraction to this region is not only good land, but easy access by the line of the Callendar branch of the Toronto & Northern Railway. French-Canadians are [illegible] numerously in the northern part of the Gatineau district. So strong does the agricultural fever seem to be, that even merchants in Hull are going out of business and will take up lands. Mr. Massue, M.P., of Varennes, has taken up land in the Gatineau districts. Mr. Moffat, editor of Le Valler d'Ottawa, recently paid a visit to the Temiscaming country, where he took up land. He speaks glowing of the country. In order to facilitate colonization in the new region, the Canadian Pacific Railway has issued special rates to intending settlers. Tenders for the building of the Long Sault Railway in connection with this colonization scheme will be open next week.

Revolting Trick.

A Corpse Hung up in a Crowded Thoroughfare—Hideous Hallowe'en Hilarity—A Dissecting Room Robbed.

"Great ghosts alive" exclaimed P. C. Jenkinson as he came to a full stop in front of Langrell's butcher shop on Parliament street, Toronto, at 12:30 Saturday night, and rubbed his eyes to make sure he was not dreaming. Having satisfied himself that he was in the undisputed possession of all his faculties he approached a nude corpse dangling from a meat-hook, which caught it under the chin. Around its neck was a white collar, while it held a mimic gun erect at its right shoulder. The ghastly sight would have petrified any ordinary person, and for this reason the officer very thoughtfully extinguished the adjacent street lamps. He hastened over to the Toronto School of Medicine, fully expecting that one of their subjects had sauntered forth to celebrate Hallowe'en, but had fallen foul of some mischievous skylarkers. Everything was quiet there and the dissecting room had not been molested. At Trinity Medical College, Jenkinson rattled up the janitor, who was very much surprised to find two corpses lying in the yard back of the College, while a third was missing from the dissecting room which had been broken into. He accompanied the officer back to Parliament street, where he identified the corpse as one that belonged to the institution with which he was connected. It was taken down and immediately conveyed within the precincts of the College dissecting room. The perpetrators of this outrage have not been arrested.

Another Epistle from "X."

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—In the DAILY EXAMINER of Saturday last some injudicious friend rushed to the defence of Mr. Geo. E. Williams, Secretary of the Peterborough Y.M.C.A. and Secretary of the Scott Act Association. The writer signed himself "Y and Z," and most assuredly, for childish imbecility and incoherence of thought, his letter takes the palm. For instance, he tells us that Mr. Williams "has a sound mind." Well, nobody ever said that he had not a sound mind. Then this profound thinker informs us that Mr. Williams is a "citizen." Surely nobody ever doubted this simple fact. We are next told by this genius that Mr. Williams is "under the same laws as all ordinary citizens." This must be startling news to Mr. Williams. But, seriously, does this intolierable nin-compoop not know that every man is "under the same laws as all ordinary citizens," unless he is a lunatic or an idiot. But we are still informed that Mr. Williams' pursuit is "a legitimate one." As far as I know, this has never been denied by any human being. But does "Y and Z" know that a pursuit may be quite "legitimate," and at the same time may be neither useful nor commendable. For instance, the pursuit of a ballad singer, or the ignorant street howl of the Salvation Army, may be legitimate enough, but does it follow that they are either useful or desirable?

Again, we are told by "Y and Z" that "obedience to law is the highest type of tax exacted from any people." I wish the collector of taxes could take this idiotic view of taxation. Next, Mr. Williams is said to belong to a class "pre-eminently useful in saving young men from vice and folly." I doubt the truthfulness of this statement, and I venture the assertion that Mr. Williams can neither save himself nor any other young man from "vice and folly" as long as celibacy, is in most cases, a violation of the immutable laws of nature. And I th nk wise men everywhere will agree with me, that an early marriage and an honest trade, will, in all cases, be far more favorable to purity of thought and a virtuous life, than all the spurious, hot-bed piety, and all the spasmodic hymn-singing of a Y. M. C. A. Indeed, it is a melancholy fact, that there is a secret vice, which is sapping the foundations of society. It fills the grave of the suicide, and the cells of the lunatic asylum; and it entails a blighting curse upon generations yet unborn. And it is also a sad fact that this loathsome vice finds nearly all its victims, among the demure, precocious youths, who are generally known as Sunday School workers, or exemplary members of a Y. M. C. A. These victims are easily known on the street, by the pharisaic smile, the unmanly gait, the unsteady eye, the haggard face, the down-cast look, and the cold, clammy, lifeless touch of their hands. These unfortunate creatures are a wreck, both in body and in mind. They are unable to follow out any steady purpose, their memory is gone, their reason is dethroned, and if they should attempt anything in literature, in nine times out of ten, they will adopt the feeble, vacillating style of "Y and Z."

Yours truly,
X.

The Burmese War Forces.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—Letters from Mandalay dated October 25th, say the Europeans there had not been molested. Warlike preparations were being made day and night, under the direction of Italian engineers in King Thebaw's service. The Burmese army, excepting a small body of soldiers, consists of an undrilled rabble, and numbers at most only 15,000 men, but the number might be largely increased by a levy of peasantry. The only European officers in the army are Molinseri, an Italian, and Travaillas, a Frenchman.

Uneasy Egypt in Danger.

The Cry of the Rebel Army is Now "On to Cairo."

CAIRO, Oct. 31.—An eye-witness informed Sister Cypriania, the nun who escaped from Kartoum, that the rebels massacred the Mudir and garrison of Senaar after the latter had surrendered. Thirty thousand Arabs are massed at Abou Hamed and are about to advance towards Koroska.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—The Times' correspondent at Assouan telegraphs that a large rebel army has left Omdurman for Abou Hamed. A number of nuns, who escaped from the rebel prisons, have arrived at Assouan. They say that they are certain that an attack on Lower Egypt is intended, as the rebel cry which was formerly "On to Khartoum," is now, "On to Cairo."

Educational Notes.

Mr. R. K. Row has been appointed principal of the Ingersoll public school.

The teachers of the United States outnumber the other learned professions about two to one. If teachers were the students of public affairs as they should be, they would exercise a vast and healthy influence on the moral, mental and political state of the country.

Teachers are taking a more active interest in public matters than they formerly did. Mr. Thibaudeau, teacher at Little Current, Manitoulin, has been elected to the municipal council of the township of Howland.

Out of four first-class honors and two scholarships given at the recent senior matriculation examination of Toronto University, the Seaforth high school won three first-class honors and one scholarship, while the remainder were taken by students from Goderich high school. Well done, Huron!

There ought to be more effective teaching done in our schools as the result of the late conventions. It does not pay spending two whole days attending a teachers' meeting, besides paying a Government officer a handsome salary for conducting these institutes, unless teachers are made more enthusiastic, skilful and efficient.

Dr. Tassie, of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, complains that pupils frequently absent themselves from examinations, with the consent of their guardians, but without the consent of their teachers. Dr. Tassie is not alone in his complaints. The practice of running away from examinations at the end of the quarter or the term is a far too frequent occurrence in different schools, public and high. It is unfair to the teachers and injurious to the pupils themselves, and the good name of the school. Parents ought not to permit it oftener than is absolutely necessary.—Stratford Beacon.

The Poets and Poetry of Canada.

[No. 16.]

Alexander McLachlan.

"A vapour in the whirlwind's power
A dewdrop glittering for an hour;
A flow'r whose pow'r to charm is due
More to its fragrance than its hue;
Such, aye has been from days of old,
The traits and types that truest shew out
That strange compound of mud and gold;
That Rara Avis called a poet."
—EVAN McCALL, Definition of a Poet.

No name is better known among our literary celebrities than the "Bard of Erin," Alexander McLachlan. It is now nearly thirty years since he published his first volume, and his fame has been strengthened and established more and more in the interval. When one knows that such competent critics as Sir Archibald Alison, D'Arcy McGee, and the Rev. Dr. George, have spoken in the most favourable and laudatory terms of McLachlan's efforts, one must acknowledge it is due solely to genuine poetic power.

Alexander McLachlan was born at Johnston, Scotland, in the year 1819, and emigrated to this country over forty years ago. He is the son of a mechanic, and although in youth sharing but few of the advantages of education, was from the first a voracious reader, and soon became thoroughly acquainted with the works of English authors.

He was apprenticed when very young to the business of tailoring, and for several years worked at his trade faithfully, while storing his mind with knowledge on all subjects of interest.

For a time he was closely connected with the Chartist movement, but after a brief visit to the United States he was completely cured of his longing for political change, and soon settled down to farm life.

It was in the year 1840 he took up his residence in Canada, at a place called Amaranth Station, near the village of Erin, where he still resides. As an author and a lecturer, Mr. McLachlan has done much for his adopted country, and by his strenuous efforts, has aided very materially in the establishment of a healthy national literature.

His chief desire seems to be to ameliorate the condition of the working classes, and to teach the rich that the distinction between them and those in a lower social grade, consists much less in intrinsic worth than in fortuitous antecedents. In fact he endeavours to fulfil for his countrymen here, the task accomplished for Scotland by Robert Burns and Hugh Miller.

His fame has extended to his native land, and he was the fortunate winner of a prize offered by the Glasgow Workman for a national song on Scott, the novelist. This prize was open for competition to the whole world, and it was no slight honor, that McLachlan's poem, "The Halls of Holyrood," secured first place. Indeed, we may well claim it is the strongest proof of his powers as a poet, and of the excellence and popularity of his production.

In 1863, the Canadian Government appointed Mr. McLachlan to lecture in Great Britain in favour of emigration to this country. His mission was eminently successful, and he was well received by all grades and classes of men, particularly by his own countrymen. Since his return, he has lectured in the principal cities and towns of Ontario, with great acceptance.

The poet is now 66 years of age, yet his muse is by no means silent. Our readers will recollect that he carried off the prize offered by the Caledonian Society, of Toronto, only last winter, for a poem on "Robert Burns." Several of his effusions have been published as late as the month of September last.

He is not in affluent circumstances, but has a quiet home with his son, and spends his time among his books and friends. The old man is a great favorite with his neighbors, who speak of him in terms of unqualified praise. He is quite free from all conventionality and cant, and delights in the beauties of nature, of which he is a thoughtful and earnest student. He is a man of keen sympathy and strong independence of spirit, with an utter scorn of base actions and a hatred of all hypocrisy and pretension. One can see at a glance he has studied carefully such authors as Burns and Carlyle, Wordsworth and Emerson, and although he is no base imitator of any of these, their ideas and their principles have helped to form his character in no slight degree. Some of his pieces, to which we hope to allude hereafter, show such power of thought and beauty of expression, that they may be termed real studies.

Dewart says of him:—"It is no empty laudation to call him the Burns of Canada. In racy humor, in natural pathos, in graphic portraiture of character, he will compare favorably with the great peasant bard; while in moral grandeur and beauty, he frequently strikes higher notes than ever echoed from the harp of Burns."

Of his "Poems, chiefly in the Scottish Dialect," published in 1856, the Hon. T. D. McGee said:—"Within two or three years Mr. McLachlan has produced a volume of poems containing pieces not unworthy of Tannahill or Motherwell."

Concerning a volume of "Lyrics," which issued from the Toronto press in 1858, Sir Archibald Alison wrote:—"We have always taken a deep interest in Canada, and will henceforth take a deeper interest, from knowing that it contains a citizen so truly inspired with the genuis of poetry as the author of these beautiful Lyrics."

The Toronto Globe, which is generally reliable and sound in its literary criticisms, said of the volume entitled, "The Emigrant and other Poems," published by McLachlan in 1861:—"The world has innumerable good versifiers, but McLachlan takes his place far above the circle of mere euphonious singers. He is obviously one of those gifted men who add to the real capital of the world's stock of thought. It may take some time, yet assuredly the day will come, when every Scotchman of taste will place these poems in his library, near the poems of Burns, and in doing so, will feel a generous pride in thinking that if his country produced in the last century the greatest of all lyrical poets, the same country has given birth, in the present century, to another poet, sprung also from the laboring class, whose songs will ere long be sung with delight in many parts of the world, and whose weighty thoughts, in fragments of verse, will yet be woven into the common speech of men."

The Rev. Dr. George commends his work thus:—"The poets' elocution is really excellent—chaste, simple and earnest—yet, this is the least of his praise. His poetry is of a very high order. The address to "Garibaldi" is, all national predilections apart, equal to "Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace bled." These selections from his reviewers show that McLachlan's is no ordinary poetry.

We sincerely trust that the day is not far distant when our countrymen generally will show their appreciation of McLachlan's works, and will insist on their being published in neat and portable form as worthy of a niche in our national literature and a place in every library.

VICTORIA REFORM ASSOCIATION.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted at the recent meeting of the Victoria Reform Association. In them volumes of truth are compressed into few words:—

Moved by Mr. W. Eyres, seconded by Mr. D. Reid, that we repose entire confidence in the ability, honor and integrity of the Hon. Edward Blake as leader of the Reform party in the House of Commons of Canada, and deeply appreciate the sacrifices he has made in giving up the practice of a lucrative profession and devoting his valuable time and his great talents to the service of his country.

Moved by Mr. D. J. McIntyre, M. P. P., seconded by Mr. John A. Barron, that in view of the rapid increase of the national debt of Canada from $174,957,268 in 1878 to about $300,000,000 in 1885, and a corresponding increase in the annual expenditure from $23,503,158 in 1878 to $35,327,935 in 1885, but without a corresponding increase in the population of the Dominion or the earning power of its people, we are of opinion that all independent men and true patriots should unite to suppress by every means in their power the extravagance, incompetency and corruption of the present Dominion Government and to check that fruitful source of extravagance, the policy which aims at individual aggrandizement at the expense of the general public, and which is now as it has been in the past the leading characteristic of Conservative rule in this country.

Moved by Mr. J. Junkin, seconded by Mr. P. Meehan, that this convention desires to express its hearty confidence in the Mowat Government, which has for many years administered the affairs of this Province with commendable care, prudence and economy, and which has gallantly defended the rights of the Province against the assaults of the present Dominion Government.

AN AFFECTING PRODUCTION.

In the latest issue of the North Ontario Observer, a good Tory sheet, under the magniloquent caption "The two Great Oceans Chained by Hooks of Steel," the unfortunate editor "dashes off" the following heart-rending gush:—

"The Dominion of Canada, the continent of America, yea the civilized world learn with pleasure that it is expected that the last spike of the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be driven home the fifth of next month, and the Canadian Pacific will then be an accomplished fact, a work which for financial daring, great magnitude and legislative pluck stands without a parallel in the world's history; no such daring and successful attempt has ever before been made by a scattered population of upwards of four million. The names of the statesmen who have undertaken and carried successfully thro' so gigantic a work will as they deserve, take a foremost place in the pages of history. The quality and extent of the work and the rapidity with which it has been pushed are something of which any people may feel proud. The weeping prophets of the Grit persuasion who shed oceans of tears over the undertaking, perdicted that it would ruin the country and could not possibly be finished within the present century are more to be pitied than blamed, they measured the capacity of the Conservative Government by the diminutive rule of Grittism. We hope that all parties will now be willing to give honor to whom honor is due for this great and successful work."

If any "weeping prophet of the Grit persuasion" can read these melting periods without an additional freshet of brine, it will be because in "shedding oceans of tears over the undertaking," he has rather run the lachrymal fountain dry. The editor should send a marked copy of the issue, containing this gushy adulation, to Major Van Horne. He will receive by return mail, either intelligence of that gentleman's suicide, or a sheaf of free passes.

The Baby Came.

Always in the house there was trouble and contention,
Little sparks of feeling flashing into flame,
Signs of irritation,
So sure to make occasion
For strife and tribulation—till the baby came.

All the evil sounds full of cruel hate and rancor,
All the angry tumult—nobody to blame!
All were hushed so sweetly,
Disappearing fleetly,
Or quieted completely—when the baby came.

Faces that had worn a gloomy veil of sadness,
Hearts intent on seeking for fortune or for fame—
Once again were lightened,
Once again were brightened,
And their rapture heightened—when the baby came.

All affection's windows opened to receive it,
Pure and fresh from Heaven, and give it earthly name,
Clasping and caressing
In arms of love, confessing
That life had missed a blessing—till the baby came.

Homes that were in shadow felt the gentle sunshine,
Smiling, as if anxious their secret to proclaim;
Grateful songs were swelling,
Of mirth and gladness telling,
And Love ruled all the dwelling—when the baby came.

Hearts that had been sundered by a tide of passion
Were again united in purpose and in aim;
In the haunt secluded,
Peace divinely brooded,
When discord had intruded—till the baby came.

Little cloud dispeller! little comfort bringer!
Baby girl or baby boy, welcome all the same!
Even o'er the embers
Of bleak and cold Decembers,
Some fond heart remembers—when the baby came.

CUPID'S TRIUMPH.

Of all worldly transactions, perhaps the one which least concerns any but the principals is marriage; and yet few marriages please everybody, second marriages especially. Why, it would puzzle a conjurer to tell, but the fact remains, and in the case of Mrs. Vanstone's re-marriage, after a long widowhood, nobody was satisfied. Old servants sulked; relations looked black; Millie Vanstone retired to her room, drowned in tears; Charley stalked about the woods, pretending to shoot partridges and squirrels, and avoided the step-paternal presence as much as possible.

"Oh, George, what shall I do?" said Mrs. Beverley—which was the lady's new name—ready to cry.

"Don't mind 'em dear!" said the squire, with a great, rolling laugh. "They're only children; they'll grow wiser as they grow older."

But the squire's determined good humor aggravated his stepchildren more than any amount of positive opposition would have done, and they made no effort to conceal their feelings.

"I never, never can call that fat man father!" said Millie.

"My dear, he don't want you to," said Mrs. Beverley.

"I can't endure the sight of him!" pouted Millie. "And Charley says exactly the same thing."

"Charley is a disobedient, ungrateful son!" sobbed Mrs. Beverley.

But here the squire himself came to the rescue.

"Young people," said he, "I don't object to your making yourselves as miserable as you like, but you mustn't torment your mother. I'll have none of this!"

Millie lost no time in carrying this revolutionary speech straight to her brother.

"Very well," said Charley, coolly; "we'll accept the challenge."

"I'll not submit to his tyranny," said Millie. "I've got a plan."

"So have I," said Charley, "lots of 'em; only they don't seem to work when I try to get them into practice."

"I've been writing to Louise Vane," said Millie.

"Who the dickens is Louise Vane?"

"Oh, Charley!" with a shocked look, "you must know! Louise Vane—my dearest friend—the only person in all the world who thoroughly understands me!"

"It seems to me as if I had heard the name before, now you mention it," said Charley, rumpling up his brown, curly hair. "But why should you write to her? and what has it got to do with our affairs?"

"She sympathizes so thoroughly with me," said Millie. "She considers second marriage as sinful as I do. And she has asked me to come to her and stay as long as I please. And there is a nice hotel in the village, Charley; and her father is very hospitable. And there is a fine supply of trout, and delightful shooting. Louise writes, and plenty of agreeable society."

"Not a bad idea," said Charley, reflectingly.

So that very night the young people deserted the shadow of the same roof that sheltered their hated step-father, leaving the orthodox letter on the traditional pin-cushion.

"Oh, George! what shall we do?" cried Mrs. Beverley, turning pale when she comprehended that her children were gone.

"Give 'em their heads," said the squire, composedly drinking his coffee. "Never drive young colts with too tight a rein. They'll be glad to come back in six weeks, or less, see if they ain't."

"But it's such a fuss about nothing," said Mrs. Beverley, half-laughing, half-crying.

"That's the beauty of it," said the squire. "That's precisely what they enjoy!" and the jolly old fellow shook with laughter.

Louise Vane received her former schoolmate with effusion.

Her father, a stately, middle-aged gentleman, spoke a few kindly words of welcome.

"Oh, dear!" said Millie, when she was alone with her friend. "I do hope we shall not disturb Mr. Vane."

"Nothing disturbs papa," said Louise. "He will never think of noticing such chits as we are. Every old maid and widow in the village has tried to marry him ever since poor mamma died."

"How dare they!" said indignant Millie. "I think the legislature ought to pass a law against second marriage. They are wicked, sinful; an outrage on civilization!"

"Of course they are," said Louise. "But don't worry, darling. Remember that you are with me now."

And the two callow young doves fluttered into each other's arms, with renewed vows of eternal friendship.

* * * * * * *

Three months of happiness at Vane Lodge followed. Millie and Louise read their favorite authors together, and worked hideous Kensington screens and impossible portieres in crewels.

And all this time neither she nor Charley wrote a line to Mrs. Beverly.

"I am afraid they have discarded me," said the poor lady. "I fear that they never mean to forgive me," she added, with a deep sigh.

"My dear, don't be a goose!" said the squire. "You don't regret our marriage, do you?"

"Never!" said Mrs. Beverley, with a gleam of spirit.

"Neither do I!" said the squire laughing.

But one day Mr. Vane called his daughter into his study, with a serious face, and when she came out she was drowned in tears, and fled straightway to the haven of her dearest friend's room.

"Darling!" cried Millie, "what is the matter? Tell me, I beseech you."

"The worst that could possibly happen!" cried Louise, tragically. "Papa is going to marry again!"

Millie crimsoned to the very roots of her hair.

"He told me so himself," said Louise. "I never stopped to ask him who it was that was to desecrate our happy, happy home. I just clasped my hands and cried, 'Papa!' and ran away, sobbing as it my heart would break. Oh, and I had so hoped that when I was married we could stay on here just the same; but, with a stepmother, of course, nothing will ever be the same."

"You married, Louise!" cried Millie.

"Didn't he tell you? But it only happened this morning. Charley has asked me to become his wife."

"But," faltered Millie, "if your stepmother loved you very much indeed—"

"Fiddlesticks!" said Louise; "as if a stepmother could love one! Oh, I hate her already! And you, too, my poor wounded gazelle, will be driven from your refuge. If I could only offer you a home——"

"It's so good of you, darling!" whispered Millie. "But I don't really think that it will be necessary, because—because——"

"You're not engaged to be married, too?" almost shrieked Louise, struck with a certain consciousness in her friend's face.

"Yes, I am," said Millie, hanging down her head.

"And to whom, you precious little conspirator?"

"To—to your father!" said Millie. "Oh, don't blame me, Louise, indeed I couldn't help it!"

Louise was a little staggered at first, but she, too, was under the glamour of love, and the two girls flew into each others's arms.

"To think that you should be my stepmother!" said Louise.

"And you my sister-in-law!" chirped Millie. "But I declare I don't know how to tell mamma, after all that I have said about second marriages, you know."

"Let me tell her," coaxed Louise. "Charley is going to take me to see her. I am to be her daughter, you know."

"And her step-grand-daughter at the same time," gasped Millie. "Oh, dear! what relation are we going to be to each other?"

Mrs. Beverley received the truants with open arms of welcome and congratulation. The squire laughed until his portly sides shook.

"I told you they would learn wisdom one of these days!" said he.

But to this day the family have not settled the complex problem of their relationship to each other.

Honest Papermakers of Old Times.

I recently saw some paper which had been printed on as long ago as 1453, and was surprised at its excellent quality. I imagined that papers were made at the present day in every way superior to those made so long ago; but after a particular inspection of the leaves of these books I have been a good deal staggered in my opinion. I found the paper made about 400 years ago in the most perfect condition, strong, flexible, of a pearly white color, and on looking through it is seen a watermark, beautiful for its clearness and delicacy. The paper is as white as can be desired, and has, as already stated, a pearly surface, such as is not seen now. The question is: Will a modern hand-made paper stand the test of an age of 400 years with equal results? I think not. There always is used more or less chloride of lime for bleaching the fibre to a white color. It has been proved that the influence exercised by this agent exists after the pulp is made into paper, however thoroughly it may be supposed to have been washed out. The action of this chemical is to make the paper get hard and brittle with age.—London Papermakers' Circular.

HENRY VILLARD.

Something About a Man who Promises to Become a Money King.

Now that Gould and Vanderbilt have retired, temporarily, at least, from the financial arena, there is some curiosity as to who shall be the next dictator, at whose nod the "street" shall tremble. By common consent Mr. Henry Villard seems to be awarded the proud position, though whether he wants it is quite another matter, for the leading spirit in the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Oregon Navigation Company is a modest man, not fond of noise or notoriety. As he is likely to come before the public far more prominently during the next few years than any other financial magnate of the day, some words as to the man may not be without interest. I do not know whether he has ever made good his claim by an act of Legislature to the name of Villard or not, but at any rate his name was originally Hilgard, and many of the same family may now be found in Belleville, Ill. The distinguished Superintendent of the Coast Survey, Professor Julius Hilgard, one of the men of whom the scientific world is proud is [illegible] Hilgard. The Heinrich Hilgard of thirty years ago, or the Henry Villard of to-day is the son of Gustave Hilgard, formerly President of the Supreme Court in Munich. Gustav Hilgard was the only one of five brothers who did not emigrate to America, and it was not originally intended that his son Henry should come here. But some wild escapade, while studying at the University at Munich, induced him to come to this country in 1853, being then 19 years of age. He got as far as Chicago, when his fortune gave out, and he was taken in hand by his uncle Robert C. Hilgard, of the Belleville Savings Bank, who took him to Belleville, where he remained until he could find his way around the new country. But Belleville was too small a place for the young man, who wandered off to see the world, and was not heard of for several years. In his wanderings he became acquainted with Horace Greeley, who was making his way across the continent, and Greeley, seeing the solid worth in young Hilgard engaged him as correspondent, with a roving commission in the West. This was before the outbreak of the war, and in that time of great opportunities Hilgard soon made a name for himself in a double sense—he became noted as an excellent correspondent, and made his nom de plume of Villard so favorably known that he ended by discarding his own name in its favor. Before the close of the war he was on the high road to fame as a newspaper writer of brilliancy and judgment, and, had he remained in newspaper life, he would unquestionably have made his fortune.

But the close of the war and the beginning of the era of wild speculation, which lasted from 1863 to 1873, offered him greater opportunities for money making than any newspaper career. He went back to Europe and laid before the rich merchants of Germany and Holland the opportunities for getting 10 and 15 per cent. for their money instead of one-fourth of that rate. He had enormous faith in our government bonds. Money was intrusted to him to place in this country, and he carried out his contract with so much judgment that enormous sums were soon placed at his disposal. In ten years after the war he made four trips to Europe, each time strengthening his position. The crash of 1873 found his investments in excellent shape, and with the revival of prosperity in 1878 Villard began to loom up as not only the agent of millionaires, but one of the fraternity himself. He had taken as good care of his own money as of other people's, and his career in the northwestern part of the United States was marked by almost infallible judgment and no reverses. The history of his fight with the Northern Pacific road and its complete capitulation is too recent to need repeating. He holds the controlling power over the railroads of the Northwest, and is, next to Vanderbilt and Gould, the most important railroad man in the country, and in such a comparison Vanderbilt can scarcely be said to count, as his power is due to inherited wealth rather than to an inborn faculty for railroad finance such as characterize Gould and Villard.

Personally Mr. Villard is extremely unostentatious, a big man in every way, physically and mentally, good humored, kind hearted, fond of work, but devoted to his family, and with cultivated taste for art and music. What his personal wealth is few persons have any means of judging; it may be anywhere from $5,000,000 to $20,000,000. More important than the actual amount of stock he may own, is the influence he wields over foreign investors, who have complete faith in his judgment. He has become in manners and language as much of an American as if he had been born here, and evidently intends to make New York his future home, for he is building a house which will equal the Vanderbilt mansion in spaciousness and effect. It is on Madison avenue, back of the Cathedral, where Mr. Villard bought the block between Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets. The style is renaissance, and the material brown stone: it is about fifty feet wide, by something over 100 feet deep. The plasterers are now at work inside, but it will be another year before it is ready for the family.

Lack of Enterprise.

Our custodians of the peace are to be accused of lack of enterprise. This morning, in spite of the fact that the downpour of yesterday gave a full head of water, there was not a single grist for the justice mill.

Self-government for Ireland.

All those in favor of such a measure of self-government being accorded for Ireland as we enjoy in Canada, are cordially invited to attend the meeting to be held in Lynch's hall, Hunter street, on Tuesday, the 3rd inst., at 8 p.m., sharp.

The Hay Fever.

On Saturday the hay market fixed its winter rates, jumping up to $13 per ton. It is predicted by the knowing that prices for this article of provender will rate high this winter. The new crop was nothing to boast of, and the quantity of old in stock is very small.

As You Like it.

A prominent citizen, a coal consumer, accosted a coal seller this morning with the remark that we were to have a month of fine weather. "O, no," said the coal man, "you may put down yesterday as the beginning of winter." Thus do our interests and wishes influence our opinions. The theremometer only is not moved by interest or prejudice.

The "King of Games."

The game will consist of three sets, the victors finally "sawing" off. The preliminary contest will be the best two in three games, while the final contest for the pot or, rather, cup, will be best seven in twelve games.

A Good Samaritan Subject.

The subject of Miss Caroline Peck's lecture to be delivered in St. John's school house, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 4th, is nursing the sick. Miss Peck is a graduate of the New York Training School for Nurses, and in view of the opening of the Nicholls hospital, the subject, ably handled, and instructive as it is certain to be, will be deeply interesting to the ladies of Peterborough. Admission, 15 cents. Doors open at 7.30, lecture at eight.

Legal Dullness.

When lawyers complain of "hard times" in their amiable profession, it is in order for ordinary mortals to congratulate themselves. We can stand cold weather, wet Sundays, financial flatness, and butter thin on the bread, if we can only manage to keep out of the clutches of the lawyers. A leading barrister lugubriously informed our reporter this morning that there were only three cases down for the docket of the chancery sittings, on November 12th.

Mrs. Watson's Recital.

The Montreal Gazette says:—"Mrs. T. Charles Watson is so deservedly a favourite here, that it was only natural the audience assembled in the Albert Hall last night to hear her readings and recitations, should have included many of the elite of Montreal society. The gifted lady, whose talents have won recognition from the highest personages in the land, unites to her undeniable genius, a charm of person and grace of manner which appeal irresistably to her hearers." Mrs. Watson makes her first appearance here to-morrow (Tuesday). Reserved seats should be secured at once at Hartley's. See advertisement.

The Care of the Sick.

All ladies interested in this subject are invited to meet at St. John's school house on Wednesday, Nov. 4th, 1885, at 8 o'clock p. m., when a lecture will be given on nursing by Miss Caroline Peck, graduate of the New York Training School for Nurses, attached to Bellevue Hospital. Admission, 15 cents. Doors open at 7.30 p.m.

St. John's Anniversary.

The third anniversary of the restoration of St. John's Church was celebrated on Sunday. The three services were well attended, especially the early morning and eleven o'clock service, but the downpour in the evening decreased the number of worshippers considerably. The musical portion of the services were especially attractive. The choir deserves particular mention for the creditable manner in which it presented its contribution to the services.

Hallowe'en.

This juvenile festal occasion was enjoyed by the youth of the town in a very subdued and sober manner compared to its mode of observance in the early days of this settlement. The pranks played abroad were generally harmless, the favorite method being imitation of the Sampsonic feat of collaring the gates of Gaza. The attention of the lads and lasses to front gates so demoralized the hinges that there removal was easily accomplished. Some householders on Stewart street still mourn the absence of their front gates and hope the perpetrators of the rapine will soon restore them.

Mission Services.

The annual missionary meeting of St. John's will this year take the form of mission services, instead of the regulation missionary meeting with addresses only. This evening full evening service will be celebrated, and this will be enriched by especial and additional musical services. The anthems will be Stainer's "What are These?" Mendelsshon's "How Lovely are the Messengers," and Whitfield's "I Will Lift up Mine Eyes." The theme of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis will be that of Tours in F, and Mr. Hampshire will render several voluntaries. Addresses will be delivered by Rev. Septimus Jones, of the Church of the Redeemer, Toronto, and others.

Corporation Carelessness.

The residents of George street who live north of, and in vicinity of, Maple Avenue, are indignant because the town refuses to put down a crossing at its intersection with George street. They complain that, since the street was opened last spring, a crossing has been badly needed, and their repeated applications to the Council have had no effect. Yesterday, the place where a crossing ought to be, was ankle deep in mud—a very Slough of Despond, to ladies especially. Some of the ladies who have votes say that if a crossing is not made at once, there will be no cross-ing put opposite the names of certain candidates next January. Don't cross the ladies, but cross Maple avenue with a substantial plank walk.

Good For Ashburnham.

An examination, in connection with the Church of England Sunday School Association, of London, England, was held last May at St. Luke's Rectory, Ashburnham. Three candidates wrote and of these, two succeeded in passing, the third only failing by five marks. The successful candidates, Messrs. Wm. Packenham and Wm. Walbrook, have received their certificates, which are exceedingly handsome lithographs, about the size of the ordinary Masonic certificate of membership. The questions in the above examinations were sent out from England, and the answers were returned by the examining secretary, Rev. W. C. Bradshaw. As an additional element of honor to Ashburnham, it may be remarked that at the corresponding examinations in Toronto only three candidates wrote.

Belleville.

At the last meeting of the Women's Christian Association, the ladies were agreeably surprized by a visit from Rev. J. W. Burke, rector of St. Thomas' Church, who handed the Treasurer a cheque for $50, the gift of J. R. Magrath, Esq., of Credit, Ont., in aid of the "Home for the Friendless."—Intelligencer.

Mount Pleasant.

While a young man named Austin, son of Mr. Jos. Austin, of Mount Pleasant, (Bunker Hill) was drawing water for the steam thresher early on Monday morning, the team ran away, throwing him out and the waggon passed over his body. Upon calling a surgeon it was found that the thigh bone was badly broken. The sufferer was made as comfortable as possible, and is now doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.—Guide.

Address to Young Men.

Rev. Mr. Tovell shows Them That Godliness is Profitable, Physically, Financially, Socially and Politically.

On Sunday evening there was, owing to a steady drift of heavy rain, a rather thin attendance at the George street Methodist Church. After the usual introductory services, the Rev. Mr. Tovell announced that his text would be found in the fourth chapter of the first epistle to Timothy, eighth verse: "For bodily exercise profiteth little: but Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." The speaker began by saying that though his address was announced as being especially for young men, all ages could profit by its lessons. There were conflicting opinions in seculiar matters, but the opinion of one leading mind often outweighed that of the many, so in religion the conflicting opinions of the many must yield to that of one preeminently distinguished. And Paul, who being taught of God was competent to speak on the subject, had settled the matter treated of in the declarations of the text. Godliness was profitable for all of all ages, in every walk, association and relation of life. Godliness was defined as being Godlike—like God in character. Godliness was good for the physical man, because all the physical habits of good men, being subject to the law of moderation, had a healthful tendency. Given a similar constitution the godly man would enjoy the most robust health. Godliness was also profitable financially The ungodly might flourish, but their prosperity was only temporary. Godliness was profitable financially because it gave character and reputation to the man that practised it, and these begot confidence, which led to preferment and increased financial gain. Apt instances were given illustrating this position. When a man was faithful to religious principles, other things being equal, God gave worldly prosperity. The principle applied to national life showed that those countries which were true to God were the leading nations of the earth. Fidelity to Christian principle aided those who were thus faithful to positions of high trust and great influence. The path of righteousness was the pathway to worldly power and preferment, and the stepping stone to positions of influence. Godliness was often a great assistance in times of emergency. A Godly character and life had often been accepted as the only security for the repayment of a loan that had saved the possessor from financial ruin. The want of the age was more real sterling practical Christianity—that dared to do right regardless of consequences. If the church were filled with members of this character, its power for good would be unspeakably intensified. While Godliness was profitable in all walks of life, in all temporal enterprises and conditions, it was immeasurably more profitable in the sunset hour of life. It bettered and brightened the whole life in temporal matters, and also filled the dying one with peace. The address closed with a stirring appeal to young men, and to all, to to practice that "Godliness, which is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come."

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

Another Rejoinder to "X."

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR.—On Friday last "X" was greatly agitated over a little information given—wisely or unwisely, as the case may be—to the public, as to the efforts being made by the Committee of the Scott Act Association to secure a recount of the ballots in time to have the Act come into force, if adopted, by the first of May next. Yesterday "X" seemed like one whipped into a white foam, so that the respectable and intelligent public must bear with, even if they cannot excuse, his "incoherent," indecent and foul thoughts. Intending to stab others, for the want of a less "restless" eye, he has hit and hurt himself.

His letter has nothing in it that I need trouble myself, or waste time in replying to. When I wrote it was not to "defend" the character of the Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., for his character in the judgment of the best thinking portion of the public is irreproachable, and therefore needs no defense. But I wrote simply to set "X" right in the use of the terms "irresponsible," "parasite," "fungus," &c. No matter who the Secretary was I would object to "X's" misrepresentations.

"X," in yesterday's issue, did what I expected he would do. He has fully made his true inwardness known. "As a man thinketh so is he." "X" must, and will be judged by the direction his wandering and delirious thoughts have taken. It would not be a strain on charity to suppose he had a "Double X" friend to stimulate his impure imagination. Evidently he is not a friend of Sunday School work, nor a sympathiser with the excellent work being done by Young Men's Christian Associations. Even the Salvation Army is to him like a red rag to a bull. He would gore, if he dare, those simple-minded and earnest people, rescuing, as they are doing, many a poor soul from a drunkard's doom; while he can look on with indifference to flagrant violations of the liquor law, and listen, probably, without pain, to the coarse shouts of the inebriate on the street. In one word, with his own literary knife he has whittled himself away, in those two letters written, till nothing is left but a little core, and that core, of his moral being, is evidently badly decayed. I am now done with "X." If I trouble your readers again it will be given over my own name, and I challenge "X" to do likewise.

Yours truly,
Y and Z.

Shutting Down for Repairs.

Next Saturday evening at 5 o'clock Mr. Peter Hamilton's Agricultural Works will be shut down for the purpose of making the annual repairs to the machinery, etc., of the establishment.

An Ingenious Trick.

A Boston man has earned the prize for disreputable ingenuity. He built two houses side by side, one for himself and one to sell. In the latter he put a furnace against the party wall, but in addition to its own proper flues he connected the hot air chamber with flues leading into his own residence. The man who bought the house with the furnace was astonished at the amount of coal it took to keep his domicile warm, while the other fellow was made quite comfortable at his neighbor's expense for nearly a whole winter before the dodge was exposed.

Ottawa Intelligence.

OTTAWA Oct. 31.—A big effort is being made here, to hold a carnival on a large scale, similar to that of Montreal, this winter, during the coming session. A public meeting will be called next week to consider the question.

A parliamentary messenger named Chapman who was formerly a lieutenant in Her Majesty's 54th Regiment was found dead in bed yesterday. The neighbors did not see him yesterday morning as usual and a little girl was sent into the house through a window. The door was opened and Chapman found dead with his wife lying insensible beside the body. It is thought he was asphyxiated by stove gas. Mrs. Chapman is in the Hospital in a very low condition.

A Crooked Postmaster.

Chas. Nourse, of Whitby, said to be a Defaulter for Upwards of $1,500.

Chas. Nourse, postmaster of Whitby, Ont. is under suspension by reason of a deficit of over $1,500 which has been discovered in his accounts. Mr. Mathew Sweetnam, Prov'l Postoffice Inspector of Toronto, received information on Thursday last in regard to the defalcation, which induced him to pay an official visit to the Whitby postoffice and its master. The Inspector examined the books and found a deficit of upwards of $1,500 in the accounts of Postmaster Nourse. He promptly suspended the defaulter, and, pending the action of the Postmaster General, placed in charge Mr. James Pringle, Toronto, formerly employed as mailing clerk on the Credit Valley. The affair has created quite a sensation in Whitby, as the defaulting postmaster had heretofore bore a character for integrity, and was highly esteemed by his fellow townsmen. He has filled the position of postmaster for the past two years.

Daring Highway Robbery.

A Toronto Clergyman Held Up in Queen's Park Last Night.

Montreal has an epidemic of smallpox, and Toronto is troubled with a severe attack of robbers. One of the most daring cases of highway robbery that have occurred in Toronto for a long time happened in the Queen's Park last evening, the victim being the Rev. James Sheraton, Principal of Wycliffe College. Mr. Sheraton had been on a visit, and was returning to the college along College avenue. He had his umbrella up, and as it was blowing hard and raining, he had it held well down in front of him. When close to the residence of Mr. J. K. Kerr, two men swooped down upon him. One grasped him at the back of the neck. The other confronted him with a revolver. Both demanded his money. Mr. Sheraton told them he had none, that he was a clergyman on his way to church. The villains had no respect for the sacred cloth; they used Dr. Sheraton very roughly and robbed him of his gold watch and chain and a small sum of money. As soon as they were finished, Mr. Sheraton was ordered to move on quietly, and threatened with violence if he made any complaints. The police were notified, but as the reverend gentleman could not give a very clear description of their appearance, it is doubtful if any arrests will be made.

A public meeting is to be held in Hamilton to discuss a proposition to petition Parliament to change the name of the Burlington Beach and Burlington Bay to Hamilton Beach and Hamilton Bay.

The Cholera.

MADRID, Nov. 2.—The ravages of cholera at Bilboa are terrible. The authorities try to suppress the reports of the progress of the plague.

A Moonlighter Turns Informer.

DUBLIN, Nov. 2.—A moonlighter named Carey, captured at Glenear, has turned informer, and the information he has given the authorities has led to many arrests of alleged accomplices.

U. S. State Elections.

The elections for the State officers and legislatures will be held in seven of the United States to-day, namely, Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia. The chief interest centres in the contest in the State of New York, where the candidates for Governor are Ira Davenport, Republican, and present Governor Hill, Democrat. There is also a Prohibition candidate in the field. The appearance now is that Davenport will receive the full strength of the Republican party, as he is supported by that section which opposed Blaine at the last election, and voted for Cleveland. The Democratic party is also united in favour of Governor Hill. The contest is expected to be very close.

The Eastern Crisis.

War Almost Certain.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The Turkish offer of five thousand irregular troops to combat the Servians is being considered by Bulgaria.

Too Many Troops.

A Constantinople despatch says the War Office has issued orders on Saturday to stop all further mobilization of troops. It was found that more men had turned up than could possibly be required unless for the purpose of a war with some European power. The official report presented to the Sultan shows Turkey now possesses under arms 430,000 men, all well equipped, armed and clothed.

War Preparations.

PHILIPPOPOLIS, Nov. 2.—The Archives of the Government have been sent to Sofia. Seventy thousand troops have been mobilized. They are well officered and equipped for a winter campaign.

Spoiling for a Fight.

A despatch from Sofia says neither the Bulgarians nor the Roumelians will submit to the renewal of the status quo ante without fighting, even if the Balkan Conference so decides.

CHARACTERISTIC.

The Dominion Government makes a big showing of interest in immigration, by the expenditure of large sums to assist immigrants to land in Canada, and to compete with native Canadians. Incidentally, too, a large proportion of the sum appropriated sticks to the fingers of proprietors of Government newspapers, and the party is, in this respect, the gainer. When no political capital can be made out of a pretended encouragement of immigration, there is no consideration shown of the interests of the country or individual. The following paragraph from the Globe shows how fearful and wonderful are the ways of the Dominion Government:

"This everlasting Custom House of ours! It has hardly recovered from the effects of taxing the lunch of the Buffalo excursionists, before it has confiscated the effects of a settler in Winnipeg, under circumstances of great hardship. The settler who, according to the Winnipeg News, was a Canadian born, had lived in the States. Not many months ago he and his family came to Winnipeg, bringing with them their household furniture. Being immigrants, their effects were admitted into the Dominion free of duty. He failed to obtain employment, and believing that he would be better able elsewhere to obtain work, in order to support his small family, he determined to return to the States. He advertised his furniture for sale. Immediately the Custom House officer swooped down upon him. "Settlers' effects," it appears, cannot be sold within two years of entry—though not one settler in a thousand knows it or regards it. The whole of this settler's effects were confiscated and sold by a bumbailiff, he and his family are left destitute, half the value of his household goods goes to the benefit of the informer, and the other half goes to swell the revenues of this great, considerate, and immigration-inviting country. If the facts are as stated by our Winnipeg contemporary, the Custom House has outdone its hitherto unrivalled self."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is expected, as stated by Ottawa despatches, that Mr. J. H. Pope's International Railway Company will undertake the construction of the Short Line Road through Maine. The international company simply means Mr. Pope himself, and he does not believe in letting anybody get what he can gobble. So Mr. Pope, as Minister of Railways, will make a contract with Mr. Pope as President of the International Railway Company, and will draw subsidy cheques payable to himself. The public interest may be amply protected.

Sir Leonard Tilley [illegible] Finance Minister with three gigantic deficits to his credit under the N.P. In 1878-9 there was a shortage of $1,937,999, in 1879-80 there was another deficit of $1,543,228, and his last grand effort shows a balance on the wrong side of $2,357,470, a grand total of $5,838,697. There can be little doubt that next year there will be another deficit of something like from three to five millions, which would make a total of deficits under the N.P. amounting to between eight and ten millions. When Sir Richard Cartwright had a surplus, Sir Leonard said no Government had any right to have a surplus. He retracted this faith afterwards, but it seems that he has returned to his former opinions.

The subjoined extract from the Battleford (N.W.T.) Herald, supplies one explanation of how the money of the Dominion is squandered by the Indian Department:—"We noticed the arrival the other day of a quantity of lime from Swift Current, for the use of the Indian Department. This importation is utterly absurd and indefensible when we consider that lime-burning is one of the established industries of the place, and that the Indians on the reserves in former years supplied large quantities to the town. The freight on the imported article must have cost about twice as much per bushel as the home-made article sells for." Some Government supporter has had some nice little "pickings" out of the lime deal—that's the explanation and that's all the justification the Government will plead.

The Ottawa Citizen points out that there is no one to call for mercy for the poor misguided Indians, under sentence of death for atrocities committed in the North-West, and adds:—"We are persuaded that the men named richly deserve the fate that would appear to be in store for them; but it is worthy of note simply because they happen to be Indians they do not appear to have any friends." If they had votes or influenced votes they would have warm friends among the Conservatives. If the opposition had allowed Sir John to give these blood-thirsty savages votes, as he at first proposed to do, Sir John and his party, the Citizen included, would have been raising a great outcry in their favor. They can be of no political use to Sir John, and therefore he has no interest in them. Sir John turns everything to political account whether it be pardoning a convicted murderer, or building a post-office or canal.

The Curse of Protection.

(From the Ottawa Free Press.)

The commissioner of the New York Sun, who has been investigating the condition of the people living in that protected district of the United States—the coal mining region of Pennsylvania—has done the cause of protection infinite harm. Protection has reduced the free people of the neighboring public, who are employed in coal mining to the condition of slaves, and it will reduce the people of Canada to the same degrading level, if it is allowed time enough to do its fell work. The evil of unrestricted immigration, too, has played into the hands of the capitalists. That which the laborer has to buy is [illegible] labor—is subject to unrestricted free trade. The newspaper whose correspondent makes these disgraceful disclosures, is certainly not open to the charge of being a free trade journal. It is in fact one of the most protectionist newspapers in the neighboring republic. Here is what it says:—

The companies filled the region with labor by importation. * * * To-day the whole region is so crowded with laborers that, notwithstanding the enormous output, not more than a third of the miners are employed at a time. Most of them have work, for the companies see to it that there shall not be great enough dissatisfaction to drive men out of the State in pursuit of other employment; but the work amounts to very little for each man, and from ten to fifteen days a month is about what the men have. * * * In almost every locality there are two or three men for every job of work, and the result is such poverty and distress, as the rich State has rarely seen. * * * But the laborers in the shops and mills as well as in mines are entirely in the power of the employers, and while they and their families are receiving barely enough to eat, they cannot accomplish anything by a strike. There are too many men worse off than themselves, who are eager to take their places.

It is unnecessary to search long or deeply or the cause of the discontent of the laborers. * * * The prevailing rate of wages in the iron mines is seventy cents a day. The amount of money which each individual has for food, clothing, medicine, and all necessaries, counting three adults to a family, a man, his wife and two children, ranges from ten cents to thirty-four cents a day. A miner has work for from ten to twenty days in the iron and anthracite regions, and it is the half or the two-thirds time which makes the rate of wages meaningless. Rents are high. A man whose monthly income is $10 pays $4 for rent, and in some places rents run up to $15 and $30. Five dollars a month is the amount charged generally by the companies for the tenements which they own.

Seventy cents a day! In a family of five,—the ordinary workingman's family—each person has for food, clothing, medicine and all necessaries, from ten cents to thirty-four cents a day! Such is the destitution and degradation to which the coal miners of Pennsylvania have been reduced under protection. Talk of England! We challenge any Tory journal to show among the coal miners of Great Britain any such state of affairs. Notwithstanding the hard times, good wages have been earned by the British coal miners, and their condition is vastly superior to that of the Pennsylvania miners under protection. Fifty thousand of the latter are at the present moment unemployed; and those who obtain work receive starvation wages and are compelled to pay extortionate prices for all they have to buy. The commissioner proceeding, says;—

Many families are starving, and the children of miners may be seen every evening at 6 o'clock at the bridges in this city begging of the workmen coming from the iron and steel works for the scraps left in their dinner cans. One of the causes of the terrible distress and the pitiful poverty of the mining regions of Pennsylvania is the importation of foreign labor. Poles, Hungarians, and Bulgarians swarm through the coal mines. * * * They spend nothing. A dollar a week is a good income for one of these Slaves. Fifty or sixty of them will live in a single shanty, sleeping on the floor and eating the refuse of slaughter houses. With their bread they use lard instead of butter. When a Bulgarian has sent home $300 he quits the country. He has acquired an ample fortune. These people, brought here to make strikes impossible are at the bottom of the distress. * * * Low wages, half time, and the tyranny of the company stores are starving the miners and their families, and compelling them to bring up their children without education. In a few years the region will be black not only with coal dust, but with the darkness of ignorance and of crimes which spring from ignorance.

Families starving. Children crying for food. The little ones begging for the stale bits left in the dinner cans of the employed men! This is the fruit of protection. The accursed system has reduced the coal mining regions of Pennsylvania, in a quarter of a century to as bad a condition of squalid misery, crime and ignornance as abounded in England at the birth of free trade. Protection is fearful in its influence for ill upon the futures of the masses—it is so grinding in its oppression as to warrant the belief that it must be born of the spawn of the infernal pit. Unless Canada abandons the ill fated policy her cities will become in a few years the hotbeds of abject poverty, crime and vice, that the villages and town of the coal mining region of Pennsylvania have become under protection.

since it was first opened said: "I never had any experience with murderers on top of a train, but I've had lots to do with other folks. When the road was first put into operation I used to say that it would never pay, even for the renewal of the ties, because it seemed to me that everybody out here then wanted to get away, and about three out of five didn't have money enough to ride a mile. The times were hard then. Lots of fellows had got out here in the southwest in one way or another, and as there was little doing here, and not much money being invested, all those who were not well-fixed when they started soon came to want. As soon as the trains got to running you ought to have seen those poverty-stricken fellows try to get acquainted with us, and endeavor in one way or another to make arrangements for to ride east. It made me tired more than once. They'd come with tears in their eyes, and beg even for a lift of one or two hundred miles.

"When a train got ready to pull out for the east it was always necessary to go through it and examine every trunk and car to see if there were any stowaways, but even that did not always [illegible] would go down the track and wait till the night train came along, and then board it, hanging on to the hand rails at the end of the cars, or laying flat on the roofs. We used to get sick of fighting them, and most of the boys made up their minds that the best way to make work a little easier was to let the tramps get out of the country. I have always thought that the company kind of winked at it, too. Of course our orders were not changed, but the thing became such a nuisance that everybody could see that it was best to have it over with. After that when three or four took their place on a freight we would make a bluff at them, and if that did not have the desired effect we would let them alone. In this way the country was soon cleared of the most helpless crowd you ever saw, and it got so after a while we could start a train out of Pueblo without hurting the feelings of the paying passengers by clubbing off a gang of non-paying ones. They would always make a determined effort to get on to a passenger train, for every little while there would be some passenger aboard who would take pity on one or more of them and give them a lift. Most of them seemed perfectly insane on the subject of getting back east. Nothing else would do them any good.

"One night, after we had gone through the train carefully, and made sure, as we thought, that nobody was hanging on, I was surprised, on going back to the caboose, to find a young fellow sitting on the edge of one of the boxes. He had a little bundle by his side, and as he heard me he grabbed it quickly, and then said, jumping up as he did so:

"'Don't you touch me, sir. I'm going home, and if you put a hand on me I'll kill you!'

"There was something so desperate, and, after all, such a pitiful tone in his voice, that I couldn't get mad, and as soon as I satisfied myself that he had no arms I told him to sit down again, and then I had a little talk with him. He was almost frantic with homesickness and despair, and the coming of the road had seemed like a godsend to him almost. He had been living on cold bites around Pueblo and adjacent towns for a long time; had been sick and well-nigh distracted, an was then twisted all out of shape with rheumatism. I found, on further questioning, that he came from my part of the country down east; that he knew all the old places that I did; that he had danced, driven, and frolicked where I had, and that he knew a good many of the folks that I knew. I couldn't see one of the old boys in that shape without thinking it might just as easily have been me, and, besides giving him a square meal, I introduced him to a brakeman at the end of the run, who promised to pass him on. We got him to the Missouri river in great shape, and there he managed to earn enough to get home. He is doing well now, and this little ticker here," said Gillam, showing a handsome gold watch with a box-car neatly engraved on the back, "is what I've got to remember him by."

Dutch Table Customs.

A correspondent of the Springfield Republican finds the Dutch table customs very droll, as Diedrich Knickerbocker did before her. She dined with the family of a Professor at the Hague. As soon as those at the table were helped they cut up all that was on their plates, and then putting their knives down, leaned on the table with their left hands, and with their forks disposed of the food with celerity and without interruption. At supper the hostess ground and cooked the coffee at the table, and the butter was taken with individual knives out of an earthen pot. Cheese was served and secured in a similar manner, and was smeared over thick slices of buttered bread. When the eating was finished, everybody sat still and watched the hostess wash the dishes, which she did at the table, using the snowiest of napkins, without wetting a finger, while the master puffed a cigar.

And to give the Citizens every facility to be properly suited, Mr. P. H. Morris, late of the firm of Lasarus and Morris, will attend on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, September 29th and 30th, and October 1st, at Mr. McKEE'S Drug Store. The quality of the Laurance Lenses and the undoubted ability of Mr. P. H. Morris, will give every inducement to our people here to call and be properly suited.

All persons who have purchased Spectacles or Eye Glasses from our former Agents, since Mr. Laurance's visit, can have their Spectacles exchanged free of charge, if they in any way are not suitable to their requirements. d82eod w

BAKERS' FLOUR:

In a circular addressed to the Public some months ago, I called particular attention to the above grade of FLOUR, claiming for it unusual excellence; since then the Public have endorsed this claim with the result of a very large increase in my sale of Flour.

I still think it is unequalled by any, of a similar grade, offered in Town, and respectfully solicit a still larger share of trade.

The Daily Examiner.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3. 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Board of Education.

There will be a meeting of the Board of Education at the Central School building this evening at 7.45, when some interesting matters are likely to come under the consideration of the Board.

Mission Services.

In spite of the unpleasant weather of last evening there was a good attendance at St. John's Mission Services, which were very successful. Especially the musical portion. In the anthems presented, solo parts were very effectively taken by Miss Errett, soprano; Miss Rush, contralto, and Mr. J. French, basso. Rev. Septimus Jones delivered a capital and entertaining address, and the Rector added a few well-timed remarks. The offerings in aid of the mission fund were very liberal.

"The Tyrant and His Victim."

We have received a communication signed "D," on the above subject. While the principle advocated in it is a good one, it is an attack of a personal character, aimed at an individual, whose position debars him from defending himself. While desirous of giving due space to correspondents, treating of public matters, we cannot allow personal feeling to be expressed where the subject is not in a position to reply, unless the correspondent assumes full responsibility by writing over his own signature.

Vaccination.

Drs. Clark and Kincaid, the civicvaccinators, have pretty well got through with their vaccination of the public school pupils. To-day the convent of the Congregation de Notre Dame will be visited, and what pupils have not been previously treated will be vaccinated. Apropos of this subject, it may be stated that the Connors family has been released from quarantine, and that the child is almost completely recovered, so that, now the disease is stamped out, with a pretty thorough vaccination of our citizens, and with prompt precautionary measures available, the town may be considered well protected against invasion of the smallpox.

McCrea's Drug Store.

A nice, neat, nobby, little shop that was opened in the Darcy block, Hunter street, on Monday, will be hereafter known by this name, and there will be found a beautiful place of business, well stocked with drugs and druggist's sundries. The fittings of this place are very elegant. The wood-work is of oiled ash with walnut trimmings, put in by Belleghem. In the rear of the shop is placed the dispensing department, a handsome plate-glass mirror, placed horizontally, screening it from view. In rear of this again is the laboratory. The establishment throughout is well equipped, and the enterprising young proprietor will, no doubt, attract a large share of public patronage.

Explanatory.

We very much regret that the correspondence which appeared in last evening's issue over the signature of "X," was allowed to find its way to the compositor's hands, without a more careful examination than it received. Trusting to the position and respectability of "X" in the community, and having glanced at the first page, we thought the remainder would only be a continuation of the controversy that has been going on re respecting the Scott Act scrutiny, without introducing new and offensive matter. As a matter of routine, the proof reader, assuming that the correspondence had been properly revised before it was sent to the printers, allowed it to pass. While disclaiming, as our correspondence heading advises, all responsibility for the opinions of our correspondents, we shall not allow the columns of the EXAMINER to be made the media through which offensive attacks may be made upon any respectable body of citizens, as through inadvertance happened in the communication in question. That this has caused considerable comment, is not to be wondered at, for the EXAMINER has heretofore been very careful in seeing that the tone of the matter appearing in its columns has been of a proper character. The language used was such as we cannot pretend to justify, and our readers may feel assured that they will not be insulted by the publication of any more such contributions.

Shipment of Swine.

To-day Mr. Wm. Dennis makes considerable shipments of hogs to the Montreal market, from Peterborough and Campbellford.

Polo Playing.

Port Hope has the start of Peterborough in one thing at least—an excellent polo club. An exhibition of this popular game between Port Hope and another club will be given in the Lansdowne rink on the afternoon and evening of Thanksgiving day, November 12th.

The Hand of Improvement.

The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company are putting in a handsome new upright steam engine in Messrs. Patterson & Son's tannery, Aylmer street. The new engine is a beautiful piece of mechanical work, and will add efficiency to the enterprising establishment in which it is placed.

Men for The Shanties.

This afternoon Mr. T. Cavanagh shipped for Jack's Creek, for Rathbun & Son's timber limits, a big gang of lumbermen. Mr. Cavanagh makes this branch of business a successful specialty. When he can't pick up a neat bit of horse flesh, he won't decline trafficing in his fellowmen. The average wages are about $14 per month.

Hard Nuts to Crack.

The hose couplings and the petition of Hunter street residents, in regard to the electric light on that thoroughfare, afforded food for the cogitation last night of the town fathers comprising the Fire, Water, and Light Committee. The result of their joint ruminations will form the material of a report to the Council at its next meeting.

Getting Ready for Business.

The new Lock Works are rapidly approaching completion, and preparations in the way of making patterns, etc., are being made for an early commencement of operations. The second flat of the building is now connected with the Central Iron Works by a covered way constructed of iron, giving easy communication between the two buildings.

A Good Samaritan Subject.

The subject of Miss Caroline Peck's lecture to be delivered in St. John's school house, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 4th, is nursing the sick. Miss Peck is a graduate of the New York Training School for Nurses, and in view of the opening of the Nicholls hospital, the subject, ably handled, and instructive as it is certain to be, will be deeply interesting to the ladies of Peterborough. Admission, 15 cents. Doors open at 7.30, lecture at eight.

Y. M. C. A., Biblical Study.

The young men's class for Bible study will assemble in the Y. M. A., Hall as usual this evening. The subject to be taken up is a deeply interesting one, being the testimony to accuracy of Scripture history, from the excavations at Nineveh, Babylon, Zoan, and other places in Bible lands. The class is conducted by the Rev. F. H. Wallace, M.A. B. D. The association give a cordial invitation to all men, youth or otherwise, to attend this class

The Little Pool Tournament.

There was a big rush of the sports at the Grand Central Billiard Parlours last night to witness the pool tournament. The contest opened with Kerr and Hourigan occupying No. 1 table and Morrison and Browen at No. 2. Out of seven games played Kerr won four, and at the other table Browen led in a similar manner. In the "saw off" between Browen and Kerr, the latter was successful in winning the trophy, scoring three gaines out of five, though the play was close. A similar tournament will take place at the Hub to-night.

What They are Saying.

I'm the boss pool player.—Champion Kerr

But you're not through yet.—The beaten ones.

I guess the smallpox is all over now.—The unvaccinated public.

Yes, but our vaccination is all over, too, and it makes our arms sore. The vaccinated public.

We have given the Hunter street lighting our careful consideration.—The Fire, Water and Light Committee.

What We May Expect.

Everyone to go and hear the winsome Mrs. Watson this evening.

And members of the Board of Education, who can't go on account of their meeting, to think of resigning.

To have Peterborough locks on all the new houses built next year.

The precocious youth of the town to get a pool craze.

And indulgent parents and careless masters to be sufferers by it.

An influx of mendicants.

Fresh west and northwest winds; fair weather; cold at night.

We Would Like to Know.

If it wouldn't pay Toronto to engage our police force to keep their disorderly town quiet.

If Jim McIntyre doesn't prefer Oriental luxury, to freezing in the bush, and pelting stones at deer that come up and ask to be shot.

And if Professor Reid tried cutting the deer in two with a single cut of his broadsword.

If some of our hunters couldn't have nearly as good fun with cows in the Court House Park.

And if it would not be a good thing if they did—for the Park, not the cows.

MARRIED.

McILMOYL—McCONKEY.—On Wednesday, Oct. 28th, 1885, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. A. E. de St. Dalmas, Mr. James McIlmoyl to Miss Harriett McConkey, both of the township of Smith.

Giant T.

As the result of my announcement, the public realize the fact that my Base Burners are selling at low prices, my stock is fast diminishing. Call early if you wish to secure bargains. ADAM HALL.

A Sure Foundation.

Mr. P. Hamilton's agricultural implement business is established on a sure foundation, [illegible] shall occupy the same position. Work is now in progress at putting a new, solid, substantial, stone foundation under his warerooms, corner King and George streets.

Blowing up a Boulder.

This morning shortly after ten o'clock the nearest attempt that could be made to blow up the Bank of Montreal was essayed. The Water Works delvers in digging the trench for mains came upon a huge granite boulder corner Water and Simcoe streets, directly in front of the office window of the manager of the Bank of Montreal. A charge of giant powder was introduced into the stone but such were the precautions taken to prevent it expending its energies on any but the legitimate object, that not the slightest damage was done except to the stumbling block boulder.

An Office Novelty.

Messrs. Poussette & Roger have introduced in their office a very ingenious copying press, for copying letters, &c., for filing away in the Shannon letter files. A large roll of paper is made to revolve through a shallow dish of water, making it thoroughly damp, and the end is then caught between two small rolls similar to those of a wringer. The document to be copied is then introduced face downward between the upper roll and the copying paper, and by turning a handle the whole passes through. The letter is then removed, while the copy goes down into the cabinet below, where it is left till dry. It is then trimmed by a cutter on the right of the cabinet, when it is ready for putting away in the file. The process, which is rapid, is a great improvement on the old methods, and promises to become popular, although the machine is somewhat expensive.

Personal.

Mrs. Holland, town, and Messrs. Stanton left this morning, per G.T.R., for Bad Axe, Michigan.

Mr. W. Johnston, of Belleville, inspector of weights and measures, and Mr. Irving, of Lindsay, assistant, were in town on Saturday, looking after the market scales.

Mr. J. F. Jeffers, General Manager of the British Empire Mutual Insurance Company is in town to-day.

Mr. Geo. Hilliard, M.P., returned on Sunday evening from the Northwest.

Mr. J. C. Nicholls has returned to town for a few days' visit, from Nebraska.

A Parliamentarian's Pregrinations.

On Sunday evening last George Hilliard, Esq., M.P., returned from a business visit to the Northwest, having spent most of his time in the vicinity of Brandon. His son, Mr. Geo. G. Hilliard, owns and conducts a large farm, 640 acres, situated 15 miles west of Brandon. Of this, 260 acres were put down to wheat this season, and Mr. Hilliard has reason to feel satisfied with the season's operations. Though the straw is not all threshed, yet, judging from the result so far, the average yield will be from 22 to 23 bushels per acre. In some portions of the "little patch" of 260 acres, the yield was fully 30 bushels per acre, but in others a partial failure reduced the average to that given above. While some of the wheat was affected by the frost, a large quantity escaped, and this is splendid grain. Mr. Hilliard brought some home with him that weighed sixty pounds to the bushel. At Brandon he saw some of the finest wheat he ever handled. The weight of it was 68 lbs. to the bushel. The price at Brandon the local market ranges from 40 to 70 cents, according to quality. The lowest figure brings a profit, for with the favorable conditions existing in the Northwest for easy tillage of the fertile soil, experienced farmers assert that the cost of raising a bushel of wheat averages only 35 cts. In Ontario a farmer that sells wheat at less than 75 or 80 cents per bushel, barely gets back the cost of production. Mr. Hilliard has experimented at his mills with sample cargoes of Northwest wheat. Good, well-ripened Northwest wheat makes a most superior strong bakers' flour. He has made arrangements for handling quanties of Northwest wheat. His son will do the buying at Brandon, and the wheat will be shipped direct by C. P. R. all-rail route, via Carleton Junction, after the close of navigation. Mr. Hilliard thinks that the transportation by rail will add only nine or ten cents to the cost of the wheat in Brandon. He also thinks the Northwest is bound to develop into a great country, the future home of teeming millions, and that it is destined to be the granary of the world. The frost that has affected the wheat for the past two or three seasons is to be regarded as a purely accidental meteorological condition that may not occur again this century, for the oldest settlers unite in saying that the recent occurrence of frost affecting the wheat has been the first since their residence in the country.

The Nationalist Movement.

Formation of a Branch of the League in Peterborough Election of Officers.

A meeting for the formation of a branch of the Irish National League in Peterborough was held in Lynch's Hall, Hunter street, last night. There was a large attendance and considerable enthusiasm, and determination to make the branch a success, manifested. The meeting was called to order by the Rev. P. Conway, who pointed out that the League was composed of members of all nationalities and creeds, who symphatized with the Irish in their struggle for their rights. The formation of large branches in important centres would be a good means of convincing the British Parliament that lovers of freedom all the world over, irrespective of creed or class, united with the aspirations of the Irish people in their fight for local self government. In this age of civilization was the great lever which moved the world and the unanimous demand of an illused people could not be disregarded by any parliament or nation. It would in a more direct sense also encourage the national party in Ireland, by showing them that Irishmen abroad were not forgetful of their down trodden brethren in the old land. One of the objects of meeting was to collect subscriptions for the Irish parliamentary fund, a fund established to aid and assist the Irish members in their fight. Not only Irishmen, but others were contributing freely to this fund. At Pittsburgh a Mr. Carnegie, a cotchman, had headed the list with $500. He (Father Conway) felt strongly of this subject, not only because he was an Irishman himself, but also because his own brother had been dragged from home, deprived of his farm and imprisoned for a long time, for no offence save that he was Secretary of a branch of the League in Ireland. When such laws existed in was incumbent upon right thinking man to assist by all in putting an end to such oppression.

MORAL SUASION

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL MEANS

It was then moved by Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, seconded by Dr. O'Sullivan, Whereas the Irish National Party, led by Charles Stewart Parnell, have placed before the world the wrongs of Ireland, and have by their great ability, pluck and perseverance achieved for her important concessions; and whereas with the view of efficiently uniting in sentiment and action Irishmen at home and abroad, the Irish National League has been established:—Be it resolved that the Irishmen of Peterborough, in sympathy with the people of Ireland in their efforts to obtain Home Rule such as we in Canada enjoy, do form ourselves into a branch of the Irish National League of America, appoint proper officers to transact its business, and do pledge ourselves to render to the cause of Ireland all the moral and material aid in our power. Carried unanimously.

Dr. O'Sullivan in seconding the resolution said he looked upon the association as one formed for the purpose of obtaining

SELF GOVERNMENT FOR IRELAND.

It was not an organization of a secret character nor had it any connection with the Fenian or other organizations which had preceded it. Its meetings were open, its purposes plain and every man who cherished in his heart sympathy for the down trodden and oppressed was cordially invited to take part in it. One great end to be gained by such a society was the dissemination of a better knowledge of Ireland's wants, aims and aspirations than had hitherto existed. A great many knew not the real object of the Irish agitation. A subsidized landlord and partizan press had, at all times, sought to make it appear that Ireland's aim was total separation from the British Empire.

SUCH WAS NOT THE AIM

or end of Irishmen. They wanted home rule, such as we enjoy in Canada, and this was only their just right. He was a Canadian born himself, but he felt for the down-trodden and oppressed people of Ireland, and would assist them as far as his means would permit.

The resolution was carried unanimously.

The election of officers then took place.

Dr. O'Sullivan was proposed as President by J. Hackett, seconded by J. Corkery, and unanimously elected.

Dr. Kincaid was proposed for first vice-president, by J. O'Meara, who referred in warm terms to the Doctor's generosity and to his sympathy with their objects.

Dr. O'Sullivan warmly seconded the motion, and pointed out instances in the past where Dr. Kincaid had proved the faith that was in him.

Dr. Kincaid was elected first vice-president; T. Cahill, second vice-president; J. O'Meara, secretary; John Corkery, treasurer; and Messrs. Hackett, Kelly, Kennedy, McIlmoyle, Delaney, Daly, Sheehy, O'Neill, Hurley and Fee as a committee of management.

Mr. O'Meara then, in a brief but brilliant speech, set forth and called upon the men of Peterborough to subscribe something worthy of Peterborough in aid of the fund. The appeal was generously responded to, about $100 being collected on the spot, and Mr. O'Meara, at the close of the meeting received $12 more. Some 25 members joined the League at once, and 30 additional names were placed on the League list to-day. The names of the contributors will be published later on. In the meantime subscriptions can be handed or mailed to the treasurer, secretary, or any of the members of the committee.

THE NEEDS OF THE HOUR,

The meeting adjourned, to re-assemble in two weeks at the same time and place.

Mr. Flaherty kindly placed his hall at the disposal of the branch, an offer gratefully accepted and duly acknowledged.

The Attempt to Misrepresent the Board of Education to Hon. G. W. Ross Fails—The Full Correspondence.

The following is the correspondence between Mr. Alex. Marling, Secretary of the Ontario Education Department, and Mr. W. A. Morrow, Chairman of the Board of Education, in regard to the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Board imposing penalties on teachers for improper absence from their duties. A perusal of it will not fail to convince the reader that a deliberate attempt was made to distort and misrepresent the facts to the Minister of Education.

Toronto, Oct. 14th, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—The Minister has received a communication from a teacher in which attention is called to a resolution of your board, forbidding any of your teachers to be absent from duty under a penalty, the object, in his opinion, of the rule, being to prevent the attendance of your teachers at the approaching convention. The Minister is anxious to know whether this surmise is correct. The Teachers' Associations were established for the express purpose of indicating better methods of teaching and generally maintaining a professional esprit du corps. The teachers have the right under regulation 132 to attend such meetings. It is very desirable that no action of the Board should interfere with the regulations of the Department, particularly in matters where experiment has shown the regulations to be beneficial to all parties concerned.

Your obedient servant,
ALEX. MARLING,
Secretary.

Secretary Board of Education, Peterborough.

Peterborough, Oct. 23rd, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to your letter of 14th inst., in reference to a resolution of the Board of Education for Peterborough, I beg to state, that the delay in answering it has been caused by the necessity of referring it to the Committee on School Supervision, and the committee instruct me to state, that your informant has entirely misunderstood the import of the resolution. It was adopted to prevent teachers absenting themselves from their duties, whenever, and as often as they pleased, without the leave of the Board, a custom, which has been so common here, that the Board had to take action to put an end to the irregularity, and it was no way directed against a Teachers' Association. I am also instructed to say that the Board knew nothing about the Teachers Association until the resolution had been adopted, and as it was not directed against such association meetings, but against the irregular conduct of teachers engaged by the Board, your correspondent has misrepresented the aim of the action of the Board.

The Board is always ready to encourage every means for promoting the fitness of teachers for the discharge of their duties; but now that the matter has been forced upon them, they fail to see the right the teachers have to disorganize a school of nearly a thousand pupils, for any purpose, without consulting them or even the Chairman of the Board. In conclusion, I would say that the town of Peterborough is a distinct county for school purposes, and no application was ever made to the Board, either by any one representing the town or any one representing the county of Peterborough, in reference to any Teachers' Institute or meeting thereof. You will not need any argument to convince you that so important a matter, as the closing of all our schools for several days, is at least worthy of a communication to the Board.

I have the honor, etc.,
W. A. MORROW,
Secretary.

The Hon. the Minister of Education, Toronto.

TORONTO, Oct. 29th, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 24th, inst., the Minister desires me to state that the explanations of the chairman of the management committee respecting the resolutions passed by the Board, imposing penalties upon teachers absenting themselves from duty, etc., are quite satisfactory,

Your obedient servant,
ALEX. MARLING,
Secretary.

WM. A. MORROW, ESQ.,
Secretary-Treasurer Board of Education, Peterborough.

He Called Him a Liar.

"You're a liar," emphatically said a young man at the corner of Bethune and Brock street, about seven o'clock last night, and jumping back, he placed himself in a fighting attitude, while another young man, to whom the insulting epithet was applied, struck out at his face vigorously, but failed to get home on it. Several friends of the two young men who were standing near by, interfered, but every time the restraining hands were removed from the two youths they made at each other again and a sanguinary conflict seemed inevitable. After some trouble, however, a member of the Y. M. C. A., who happened to be present, succeeded in stilling the storm of angry passions that had arisen in their two turbulent breasts, and then the question was asked,

"Why, boys, you are old chums, what in the world were you fighting about?"

"He called me a liar," said the first, "you could not expect a man to stand that, could you?"

"Well," said the Y. M. C. A. friend, "it all depends; why did you call him a liar?"

"Why did I call him a liar? because he said that in Toronto you could buy furniture cheaper than you can at Dan. Belleghem's on Hunter street.

"Ah!" said the Y. M. C. A. friend softly, "I'm afraid he was right in calling you a liar, for mark my words, there's no place in the country where you can get better or cheaper furniture than at the same Daniel Belleghem's on Hunter street. You'd better shake hands boys, and when you get married, don't go to Toronto to buy furniture."

An Explanation From "X."

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I observe that an article which appeared in the DAILY EXAMINER of the 2nd inst., has given offence to some of your readers. Now I can assure you that the article in question was not written with the intention of offending anyone. There are some subjects which cannot be handled with silk gloves, and I am at a loss to know why our Christianity is so sensitive, that we cannot bear to hear a great wrong set in its proper light. Sometimes a personal exposure gives great offence, when it is only intended for the people's good. I utterly disclaim any feeling against Sunday School work, or against the Y.M.C.A., as has been insinuated. On the contrary, I advocate any moral agency which has a tendency to benefit the human race. And I am still of opinion that parents and clergymen should speak out boldly against anything which has a tendency to evil. Hoping that "Y and Z" has recovered from his last effort, I bid you good-bye for the present.

Yours truly,
X.

Peterborough, Nov. 4.

[We give the above insertion, because it is only an explanation of the position "X" occupies, and it is due to him as a responsible member of the community. Enough has now been said on the subject. Further controversy would be unprofitable, and THE EXAMINER cannot undertake to be the medium of a continuation of it.

A Decided Denial.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

A report as false as it is malicious has, I find, been freely circulated to the effect that I am the writer of the letters signed "X," lately appearing in your columns. I need hardly say that anyone to whom I am known would not for a moment suspect me as the author of the epistle bearing the signature of "X," which appeared in your issue of Monday evening. As, however, the rumor has spread so far that I have been spoken to about it several times by gentlemen in town, would you kindly allow me the use of your columns to most emphatically deny that I wrote the letters signed "X," or any of them. I would further say I neither dictated or inspired those letters, never saw them till they appeared in your columns and have not the remotest idea of who "X" may be. It must not be understood, however, that I in any way sympathize with Mr. Williams' letter. His mendacious statements regarding the course pursued on the recount were well answered by "Lex" (every word of whose letter I endorse) in the Review last week and his unfounded insinuations against the court must meet with the condemnation of all right thinking men. Indeed it is at present under consideration of counsel for the petitioners as to whether they will not have this too-forward youth's presumption and impertinence brought before the notice of the court on a motion to commit him for contempt.

Yours &c.
JOHN O'MEARA.

"Daniel."

A full rehearsal of the Cantata, "Daniel," including all the solos, was held last evening in the Oddfellows' hall, under the conductorship of Messrs. Miller and Hampshire. The orchestral accompaniments were played by the Fire Brigade Band orchestra and the cantata went very smoothly, everyone taking their parts in a highly creditable manner. At the conclusion of the practice refreshments were provided by Messrs. Claxton and Sproule who have made this point their special care at all the rehearsals. The management are in communication with costuming establishments in Toronto and Boston for appropriate dresses, and there is no doubt that the putting on of the cantata will be fully as excellent as the musical arrangements promise to be.

A Warning Note.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—The Standard, this morning, gives a warning note on "the factitious revival of trade in America," which, it says, is meant to excite faith in the efficacy of the new railway. It says the operative forces of the country, though existent, have barely begun to operate yet.

Irish Members Attaked by Fenians.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—On Sunday night, while Messrs. O'Kelly and Kenny, members of Parliament, were leaving Dysart, Scotland, they were attacked by a body of men armed with sticks, who shouted, "To hell with the National League!" "Three cheers for the Fenians!" Several Nationalists who were escorting the two members were injured. Messrs. O'Kelly and Kenny retreated to the village, where they remained for the night.

WORKINGMEN AND MILLIONAIRES.

What do the tens of thousands of unemployed workmen in Canada, many of whom voted for the N.P., on the understanding that it would give them steady wages and constant employment, and who paid their enormous taxes willingly, now think of the situation? Their money, as well as their occupation is gone. The Government has deceived the workingmen and bestows the hard earned taxes he pays in rewarding political hirelings and the monopolists and millionaires, whom alone the N.P. has benefitted. The Government gives assistance to immigrants to come to Canada to compete with Canadian workingmen, whose hands are idle and whose families are hungry. It allows the spoon-eyed Chinaman in British Columbia to cuckoo white workmen out of their places, because the garbage-eating Celestials will work for starvation wages, to favor a pet Government contractor who is rolling up wealth by the millions. As an example, Onderdonk employed 7,000 Chinamen on his C. P. R. contract in British Columbia. He was awarded it by Sir Charles Tupper, though his offer was $209,000 higher than the lowest tenderer. Yet he lodges a heavy bill for extras, and what is more, it is likely to be paid. The Tory Cabinet is ever kind to the millionaires, and sometimes—that is at election times,—kind, in the way of promises, to the workingman. The whole policy of the government since the last election has been to ignore his position, yet we shall see how he will be patted on the back again as soon as an election approaches. Apart from any specific official announcement, no indication of an approaching general election will be more to be depended on than the flattering tone the Tory organs will all take as by prearrangement, towards the workingmen. Workingmen of Canada, when the organs begin to flatter you, and tell you what fine fellows you are, then look out for an election. You have been grievously fooled once by N. P., promises, and you are to be pitied; if you are fooled again, you will deserve all you may get. You have learned by bitter experience that the Dominion Government don't care a fig for your interests, and you will have to look out for yourselves. You have the ballot in your hands and know how to use it.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We are assured, on what we must regard as good authority, that there are over two hundred hacks in the city of Ottawa. We shouldn't wonder. Considering that the Dominion Government spends something like $50,000 a year in hack hire, we are surprised that the hacks do not number two thousand.

The Tory journals claim that Sir Leonard Tilley deserted the post of danger—and deficit—through ill health. A good authority states that the late Finance Minister is greatly improved in health! If this be so it would seem that the real disease which Sir Leonard is suffering from is cowardice and financial remorse.

The Ottawa Free Press points out that at a time when the country was threatened with a huge deficit Sir John Macdonald gave each of his followers in the Senate and House of Commons an additional $500 for sessional indemnity out of the public treasury. The aggregate amount so filched was nearly one-half the difference between the total deficit and that portion chargeable to the North-west rebellion!

The Liberals of London and district will tender Hon. Edward Blake a banquet on his return from Europe. Preliminary steps with that object in view were taken by the Reform Association of London last night. Though Mr. Blake's conduct requires no vindication at the hands of his supporters, the meeting was unanimous in the opinion that a demonstration and banquet would be a proper answer to the slanders and calumnies of the Tory press about him.

The New York Sun, discussing the case of Riel, says that in the event of his execution he would be in one sense a martyr, "for there would have been no second rebellion for him to head but for the administrative maltreatment of the French-speaking half-breeds in the Northwest." From the point of view it regards Riel "as a victim of the Government's wrong-doing." The Sun further says that "the present Ministry virtually admit responsibility for the late outbreak by proposing legislative remedies for the grievances of which the half-breeds complained and which Riel strove to redress."

The Reformers of London have resolved to get up a banquet in honor of Mr. Blake immediately after his return to Canada. No doubt this resolution will meet the approval, not only of the Reformers in the immediate vicinity of London, but in all the surrounding constituencies, and we anticipate a larger attendance at this banquet than perhaps at any that has ever been held in this country. London is the centre of a populous district filled with intelligent and appreciative people, who are fully aware of the immense sacrifices Mr. Blake has made in the interest of good government, and who will be prepared to extend to him that sympathy and support without which his great labors would in no small degree be neutralized.

A HANDSOME LODGE ROOM.

L. O. L. No. 954, one of the strongest and most influential of the lodges in Victoria county, has displayed a commendable enterprise in fitting up and furnishing their room, and by the end of the week the work will be completed. The lodge room is in the block on Kent street, over Mr. E. Woods' store, and centrally situated. In addition to thoroughly renovating and decorating the room, a handsome new carpet has been purchased and placed on the floor. New chairs and seats have been added and a number of attractive fixtures have been replaced by new, and the organization will go ahead under the favorable auspices of having a comfortable and well appointed room for use. Mr. E. Woods is putting in the necessary fixtures for lighting with gas, and a number of handsome chandeliers and pendents have been selected. As the Canadian Order of Foresters, and possibly the local Royal Arcanum Chapter, will meet in this room, our friends of 954 will have something coming in in the way of rents as a set off against the expenditure incurred in fitting up, which amounts to nearly $800.—Post.

Posthumous Opportunity.

Mr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Sunday Morning, October 18th, 1885.

If the tree fall toward the south, or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.—Eccles. xi: 3.

There is a hovering hope in the minds of a vast multitude that there will be an opportunity in the next world to correct the mistakes of this; that, if we do make a complete shipwreck of our earthly life, it will be on a shore up which we may walk to a palace; that, as a defendant may lose his case in the Circuit Court, and carry it up to the Supreme Court or Court of Chancery, and get a reversal of judgement in his behalf, all the costs being thrown over on the other party, so if we fail in the earthly trial, we may in the higher jurisdiction of eternity have the judgment of the lower court set aside, all the costs remitted, and we be victorious defendants forever.

A CHIMERICAL HOPE.

My object in this sermon is to show that common-sense, as well as my text, declares that such an expectation is chimerical. You say that the impenitent man having got into the next world and seeing the disaster will, as a result of that disaster, turn, the pain of the cause of his reformation. But you can find ten thousand instances in this world of men who have done wrong and distress overtook them suddenly. Did the distress heal them? No; they went right on.

PAIN DOES NOT CURE.

That man was flung of dissipations. "You must stop drinking," said the doctor, "and quit the fast life you are leading, or it will destroy you." The patient suffers paroxysm after paroxysm, but under skilful medical treatment he begins to set up, begins to walk about the room, begins to go to business. And, lo! he goes back to the same grogshops for his morning dram, and his evening dram, and the drams between. Flat down again. Same doctor. Same physical anguish. Same medical warning.

Now the illness is more protracted, the liver is more stubborn, the stomach more irritable, and the digestive organs are more rebellious. But after a while he is out again, goes back to the same dram shops, and goes the same round of sacrilege against his physical health.

He sees that his downward course is ruining his household, that his life is a perpetual perjury against his marriage vow, that that broken-hearted woman is so unlike the rosecheeked young wife that he married, that her old schoolmates do not recognise her, that his sons are to be taunted for a lifetime by the father's drunkenness, that the daughters are to pass into life under the scarification of a disreputable ancestor. He is drinking up their happiness, their prospects for this life, and, perhaps, for the life to come. Sometimes an appreciation of what he is doing comes upon him. His nervous system is all a jangle. From crown of head to sole of foot he is one aching, rasping, crucifying, damning torture. Where is he? In hell on earth. Does it reform him?

After a while he has delirium tremens, with a whole jungle of hissing reptiles let out on his pillow, and his screams horrify the neighbors as he dashes out of his bed, crying: "Take these things off me!" As he sits, pale and convalescent, the doctor says: "Now I want to have a plain talk with you, my dear fellow. The next attack of this kind you will have, you will be beyond all medical skill, and you will die. He gets better and goes forth into the same round again. This time medicine takes no effect. Consultation of physicians agree in saying there is no hope. Death ends the scene.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

That process of inebriation, warning, and dissolution is going on within stone's throw of this church, going on in all the neighborhoods of Christendom. Pain does not correct. Suffering does not reform. What is true in one sense is true in all senses, and will forever be so, and yet men are expecting in the next world purgatorial rejuvenation. Take up the printed reports of the prisons of the United States, and you will find that the vast majority of the incarcerated have been there before, some of them four, five, six times. With a million illustration all working the other way in this world, people are expecting that distress in the next state will be salvatory. You cannot imagine any worse torture in anyother world than that which some men have suffered here, and without any salutary consequence.

AN UNPROFITIOUS BEGINNING.

Furthermore, the prospect of a reformation in the next world is more improbable than a reformation here. In this world the life started with innocence of infancy. In the case supposed the other life will open with all the accumulated bad habits of many years upon him. Surely, it is easier to build a strong ship out of new timber than out of an old hulk that has been ground up in the breakers. If with innocence to start with in this life a man does not become godly, what prospect is there that in the next world, starting with sin, there would be seraph evolved? Surely the sculptor has more prospect of making a fine statute out of a block of pure white Parian marble than out of an old black rock seamed and cracked with the storms of a half century. Surely upon a clean, white sheet of paper it is easier to write a deed or a will than upon a sheet of paper all scribbled and blotted and torn from top to bottom. Yet men seem to think that, though the life that began here comparatively perfect turned out badly, the next life will succeed, though it starts with a dead failure.

TIME NO REFORMER.

"But," says some one, "I think we ought to have a chance in the next life, because this life is so short it allows only small opportunity." We hardly have time to turn around between cradle and tomb, the wood of the one almost touching the marble of the other. But do you know what made the ancient deluge a necessity? It was the longevity of the antediluvians. They were worse in the second century of their lifetime than in first hundred years, and still worse all the way on to seven, eight, and nine hundred years, and the earth had to be washed, and scrubbed, and soaked, and smothered, clear out of sight for more than a month before it could be made fit for decent people to live in. Longevity never cures impenitency. All the pictures of Time represent him with a scythe to cut, but I never saw any picture of Time with a case of medicines to heal. Seneca says that Nero for the first five years of his public life was set up for an example of clemency and kindness, but his path all the way descended until at sixty-eight he became a suicide. If eight hundred years did not make antediluvians any better, but only made them worse, the ages of eternity could have no effect except prolongation of depravity.

UNPROFITIOUS SURROUNDINGS.

"But," says some one, "in the future state evil surroundings will be withdrawn and elevated influences substituted, and hence expurgation and sublimation, and glorification." But the righteous, all their sins forgiven, have passed on into a beatific state, and consequently the unsaved will be left alone. It cannot be expected that Dr. Duff, who exhausted himself in teaching Hindoos the way to heaven, and Dr. Abeel, who gave his life in the evangelization of China, and Adoniram Judson, who toiled for the redemption of Borneo, should be sent down by some celestial missionary society to educate those who wasted all their earthly existence. Evangelistic and missionary efforts are ended. The United Kingdom of the heavenly bankrupt by themselves, where are the salvatory influences to come from? Can one speckled and bad apple in a barrel of diseased apples turn the other apples good? Can those who are themselves down help others up? Can those who have themselves failed in the business of the soul pay the debts of their spiritual insolvents? Can a million wrongs make one right?

A DEMORALIZED THEORY.

Furthermore, it would not be safe for this world if men had another chance in the next. If it had been announced that, however wickedly a man might act in this world he he could fix it up all right in the next, society would be terribly demoralized, and the human race demolished in a few years. The fear that if we are bad and unforgiven here it will not be well for us in the next existence is the chief influence that keeps civilization from rushing back to semi-barbarism, and semi-barbarish from rushing into midnight savagery, and midnight savagery from extinction, for it is the astringent impression of all nations, Christian and heathen, that there is no future chance for those who have wasted this.

Multitudes of men who are kept within bounds would say, "Go to now! Let me get all out of this life there is in it. Come, gluttony, and inebriation, and uncleanness, and revenge, and all sensualities, and wait upon me! My life may be somewhat shortened in this world by dissoluteness, but that will only make heavenly indulgence on a larger scale the sooner possible. I will overtake the saints at last, and will enter the Heavenly Temple only a little latter than those who behaved themselves here. I will on my way to heaven take a little wider excursion than those who were on earth pious, and I shall go to heaven via Gehenna and via Sheol." Another chance in the next world means free license and wild abandonment it this.

Suppose you were a party in an important case at law, and you knew from consultation with the judges and attorneys that it would be tried twice, and the first trial would be of little importance, but that the second would decide everything, for which trial would you make the most preparation, for which retain the al'est attorneys, for which be most anxious about the attendance of witnesses? You would put all the stress upon the second trial, all the anxiety, all the expenditure, saying, "The first is nothing, the last is everything." Give the race assurance of a second and more important trial in the subsequent life, and all the preparation for eternity would be post-mortem, post-funeral, post-sepulchral, and the world with one jerk be pitched off into impiety and godlessness.

SUFFICIENT CHANCES IN LIFE.

Furthermore, let me ask why a chance should be given in the next world if we have refused innumerable chances in this? Suppose you give a banquet, and you invite a vast number of friends, but one man declines to come, or treats your invitation with indifference. You in the course of twenty years give twenty banquets, and the same man is invited to them all, and treats them all in the same obnoxious way. After a while you remove to another house, larger and better, and you again invite your friends, but send no invitation to the man who declined or neglected the other invitations. Are you to blame? Has he a right to expect to be invited after all the indignities he has done you? God in this world has invited us all to the banquet of His grace. He invited us by His Providence and His Spirit three hundred and sixty-five days of every year since we knew our right hand from our left. If we declined it every time, or treated the invitation with indifference, and gave 20 or 40 or 50 years of indignity on our part toward the Banqueter, and at last He spreads the banquet in a more luxuriant and kingly place, amid the heavenly gardens, have we a right to expect Him to invite us again, and have we a right to blame Him if He does not invite us?

THE GOSPEL SHIP.

If twelve gates of salvation stood open twenty years or fifty years for our admission, and at the end of that time they are closed, can we complain of it and say, "These gates ought to be open again. Give us another chance!" If the steamer is to sail for Hamburg, and we want to get to Germany by that line, and we read in every evening and every morning newspaper that it will sail on a certain day, for two weeks we have that advertisement before our eyes, and then we go down to the dock fifteen minutes after it has shoved off into the stream and say: "Come back. Give me another chance. It is not fair to treat me in this way. Swing up to the dock again, and throw out the planks, and let me come on board." Such behavior would invite arrest as a madman.

And if, after the gospel ship has lain at anchor before our eyes for years and years and years, and all the benign voices of earth and heaven have urged us to get on board, as she might sail away at any moment, and and after a while she sails without us, is it common sense to expect her to come back? You might as well go out on the Highlands at Neversink and call to the Aurania after she has been three days out, and expect her to return, as to call back an opportunity for heaven when it has once sped away. All heaven offered us as a gratuity, and for a lifetime we refuse to take it, and then rush on the bosses of Jehovah's buckler demanding another chance. There ought to be, there can be, there will be, no such thing as posthumous opportunity. Thus our common sense agrees with my text—"If the tree fall toward the south, or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be."

You see that this idea lifts this world up from an unimportant way station to a platform of stupendous issues, and makes all eternity whirl around this hour. But one trial for which all the preparation must be made in this world, or never made at all. That piles up all the emphases and all the climaxes and all the destinies into life here. No other chance! Oh, how that augments the value and the importance of this chance!

ALEXANDER'S LIGHT.

Alexander with his army used to surround a city, and then would lift a great light in token to the people that, if they surrendered before that light went out all would be well; but if once the light went out, then the battering-rams would swing against the wall, and demolition and disaster would follow. Well, all we need to do for our present and everlasting safety is to make surrender to Christ, the King and Conqueror, surrender of our hearts, surrender of our lives, surrender of everything. And He keeps a great light burning, light of Gospel invitation, light kindled with the wood of the cross and flaming up against the dark night of our sin and sorrow. Surrender while that great light continues to burn, for after it goes out there will be no other opportunity of making peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Talk of another chance! Why, this is a supernatural chance!

In the time of Edward the Sixth, at the battle of Musselburgh, a private soldier, seeing that the Earl of Huntley had lost his helmet, took off his own helmet and put it upon the head of the Earl; and the head of the private soldier uncovered, he was soon slain, while his commander rode safely out of the battle. But in our case, instead of a private soldier offering helmit to an earl, it is the King putting His crown upon an unworthy subject, the King dying that we might live. Tell it to all points of the compass. Tell it to night and day. Tell it to all earth and heaven. Tell it to all centuries all ages all millenniums, that we have such a magnificent chance in this world that we need no other chance in the next.

A DREAM.

I am in the burnished Judgment Hall of the Last Day. A great white throne is lifted, but the Judge has not yet taken it. While we are waiting for His arrival I hear immortal spirits in conversation. "What are you waiting here for?" says a soul that ascended from America. The latter says: "I came from America, where 40 years I heard the Gospel preached, and Bible read, and from the prayer I learned in infancy at my mother's knee until my last hour I had Gospel advantage, but for some reason I did not make the Christian choice, and I am here waiting for the Judge to give me a new trial and another chance." "Strange," says the other; "I had but one Gospel call in Madagascar, and I accepted it, and I do not need another chance."

"Why are you here?" says one who on earth had feeblest intellect to one who had great brain, and silvery tongue, and sceptres of influence. The latter responds: "Oh, I knew more than my fellows. I mastered libraries, and had learned titles from colleges, and my name was a synonym for eloquence and power. And yet I neglected my soul, and I am here waiting for a new trial." "Strange," says the one of the feeble earthly capacity; "I knew but little of worldly knowledge, but I knew Christ, and made Him my partner, and I have no need of another chance."

Now the ground trembles with the approaching chariot. The great folding doors of the Hall swing open. "Stand back!" cry the celestial ushers. "Stand back, and let the Judge of quick and dead pass through!" He takes the throne, and, looking over the throng of nations, He says: "Come to Judgment!" By one flash from the throne all the history of each one flames forth to the vision of himself and all others. "Divide!" says the Judge to the assembly. "Divide!" echo the walls. "Divide!" cry the guards angelic.

And now the immortals separate, rushing this way and that, and after a while there is a great aisle between them, and a great vacuum widening and widening, and the Judge, turning to the throng on one side, says. "He that is righteous let him be righteous still, and he that is holy let him be holy still;" and then turning towards the throng on the opposite side, He says: "He that is unjust let him be unjust still, and he that is filthy let him be filthy still," and then lifting one hand towards each group, He declares: "If the tree fall toward the south or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth there it shall be." And then I hear something jar with a great sound. It is the closing of the Book of Judgment. The Judge ascents the stairs behind the throne. The Hall of the last Assizes cleared and shut. The High Court of Eternity adjoured forever,

Ay, a' ae oo!

It has been said that the Scottish dialect is peculiarly powerful in its use of vowels, and the following dialogue between a shopman and a Customer has been given as a specimen. The conversation may relate to a pair of Blankets hanging at Alexander's store door.

CUS.—(inquiring the material—oo? (wool?)

SHOP—Ay, oo! (Yes, of wool).

CUS.—A' oo? (All wool?)

SHOP—Ay, a' oo. (Yes, all wool.)

CUS.—A'jee oo? (All same wool?)

SHOP—Ay, a' ae oo. (Yes, all same wool).

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Thanks.

The committee of the Peterborough Protestant Home thankfully acknowledge the following donations for October:—General Haultain, seven bags of potatoes; Mrs. Robt. Innes, vegetables; Mrs. George A. Smith, load of wood; $35, proceeds of concert at the Opera House.

MIKADO IS COMING.

No Quorum.

The meeting of the School Board called for last evening was not held, there not being sufficient members of the Board present to form a quorum. The winsome Watson's charms were to great to be resisted by the average School trustee.

Sewing Meeting

A weekly meeting for sewing will be resumed at the Barnardo Home on Friday next, 6th inst., at 3 o'clock, p.m. Cast off clothing will be thankfully received. All ladies interested in the Home are requested to attend. L. WALLIS, President.

The Far West.

Rev. J. Sievewright, B.A., Presbyterian minister in Muskoka, delivered a most entertaining and instructive lecture on the above subject last evening in the school room of St. Andrew's Church. The reverend lecturer graphically described the maladministration of Indian affairs that prevails in our Northwest territories, stating that the course of missionary work and enterprise was seriously retarded and hampered by it. The audience, which was fairly large, heard him with great attention, and manifested much pleasure in his discourse.

No Time Like the Present.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, is the time to turn your advocacy into practise by encouraging home manufacture. Do not follow the example of the grangers, when you have an establishment here of which Toronto, nor even Montreal, can boast of a better. No exemption or bonus has ever been asked, this being the 25th winter season since established. Extra efforts have been made to reduce prices of selected furs to the low prices of wholesale make of goods, made for a sell. A quarter of a century of successful manufacture is the best guarantee that one can give of his goods, of which most people can not know much about the make-up, for outward look is but a poor show of inner quality.

2d-2w WM. LECH.

Mrs. Watson's Recitations.

A large and fashionable audience assembled in Bradburn's Opera House last night on the occasion of the first appearance in Peterborough of Mrs. T. Charles Watson, the justly celebrated dramatic reciter. A thrill of pleasure pervaded the audience as a magnificently dressed lady, beautiful in feature and graceful in movement, appeared, smiling, at the footlights. The programme presented furnished excellent opportunities for the display of the lady's rare dramatic powers. She is possessed of rich voice, which she uses with excellent judgment and taste to suit the varied emotions and feelings called for in the rendering of her selections, while a beautiful face of great mobility and sympathy of expression, combined with exquisite grace and appropriatiness of gesture, unite to complete a charm that holds her audience wrapt in admiration during the presentation of her several numbers. The programme presented last night, comprised selections, showing Mrs. Watson's rare powers in the delineation of the humourous, pathetic and tragic, and the delight of the audience was shown by enthusiastic applause. The sparkling vivacity of "Money Musk," the profound pathos of "My Little Girl," delightful as they were, hardly prepared the audience for the surprise which her excellent exposition of the character of Lady Macbeth in the letter and sleep walking scenes, produced. In the first the listener could almost see the cowering husband shrink before the magnificent scorn expressed in the passage ending with, "like the poor cat i' the adage," while the sleep-walking scene was a thrilling impersonation of the somnambulistic Lady Macbeth. The agony of remorse that harrowed the heart and haunted the sleep of the murderess, were portrayed in a manner whose weird realism transported the audience "beyond the ignorant present" to the scene itself. It was wonderfully well done. Throughout the evening Mrs. Watson created a highly favorably impression.

Ladies Bible Class.

Rev. A. Munro will resume his Bible Class to-morrow afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. Ladies of all denominations are invited.

Remember.

Remember, as Charles I. said, that the exhibition game of polo, between Port Hope and another club, will take place at the Lansdowne Rink, on Thinksgiving night, November 12th.

Giant T.

As the result of my announcement, the public realize the fact that my Base Burners are selling at low prices, my stock in fast diminishing. Call early if you wish to secure bargains. ADAM HALL.

Railway Accident.

A Lindsay dispatch states that last evening at that place a brakeman named E. Hargrove fell between the cars of a special and one leg was so mangled that it is feared amputation will be necessary.

Lodged in the Gaol.

John Mills, an indigent man incapable of of working, applied to Mr. Dumble at the Police Court this morning to be sent to gaol for one month. Mr. Dumble thinking, probably that the winter would last longer than a month, sent him for six months.

More Bovine Vagrants.

Chief Johnston and P. C. Charles McGinty made another raid on the cows last evening capturing four stray beasts in the North Ward and putting them in the pound. Cow owners will soon find that it does not pay to let their animals run loose on the public streets.

Increasing Their Capacity.

Some extensive improvements are in progress at the Gas works, where a new roof, entirely of iron, is being substituted for the present one and the capacity of the gas holders is being increased, at a cost of $3,000. Other improvements are are being made that will preclude the possibility of any scarcity of gas in future.

Carters and Badges.

Some time ago it was discovered that a by-law, compelling all licensed carters to wear badges, was in existence, and an order was issued that they should comply with it, furnishing their own badges. The carters decline doing this, and argue that the town should supply them, if only for the sake of securing uniformity, which could not well be done if every man is left to the dictates of his own fancy. The carters are accordingly waiting for the supply of the distinguishing marks.

Court House Park Improvements.

Mr. James Stevenson, to whose energetic action and strict supervision so large a measure of the success attending the throwing open of the Court House Park is due, informs us that the total sum expended on the various improvements during the past season is $1,300. So much money will not be required for the additional improvements proposed to be carried on next year, as they will consist in the main of laying down walks, &c. A number of young trees will also be planted, and, pleasing to the eye as this favorite resort was during the past summer, it will be even more beautiful during the next, that is if careless cowkeepers can be made to understand that it is not designed for a cattle ranche.

Personal.

Bishop Jamot will sail from New York for Europe on Nov. 16th, per steamer Aurania, of the Cunard Line, of which Mr. Thomas Menzies is the Peterborough agent.

MIKADO IS COMING.

An Interesting Bible Class.

The Y. M. C. A., Bible class had a very interesting session last night, the subject considered being the corroborative evidences to the truth of the Scripture. The Rev. Mr. Wallace, who conducts the class, referred to the confirmation of Scripture history, in the writings of contemporaneous historians, such as Josephus, Tacitus and Pliny the younger. He also gave particulars of the explorations and excavation conductedy by various individuals and societies at Babylon, Nineveh, Zoan, Sucooth, and many other places within Bible lands. The records found bore a wonderful testimony to the truth of God's word, in an age when the criticism of the histories contained in it is most active. While internal evidences to the truth of the Bible alone, are enough to satisfy most men, the corroborations afforded by these researches are strengthening to the faith of Christian students.

Orange Meeting.

We have been requested to publish the following resolutions, which were unanimously carried at a largely attended meeting of L.O.L. No. 80, last night, in their hall, on the corner of George and Simcoe streets:

"That, in the present condition of Ireland, we the assembled members of L.O.L. No. 80 believes it to be the duty of all true Irish Protestants to oppose the advance of the so-called Nationalists (Parnellites), and to join with all true and loyal British subjects to show a united front against sedition and anarchy."

"That L.O.L. No. 80 sees with regret the obstacles that are being put forward to prevent the just penalty from being meted out on the scaffold to the rebel Riel for his many crimes, and that this lodge is of the opinion that no further respite should be granted him, but that he should suffer the extreme penalty of the law, and be hanged in fulfillment of the sentence passed upon him; and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Right Honourable Sir J. A. Macdonald."

MIKADO IS COMING.

Bishop Jamot's Decennial Visit.

His Lordship's Prospective Visit to Rome and Tour in Europe—Some Interesting Diocesan Statistics.

The near approach of the date on which His Lordship, Bishop Jamot is to pay his decennial visit to Rome was recently announced in the EXAMINER. His Lordship will leave Peterborough on the 10th inst., and proceed, via G. T. R., to New York, where, on the 14th inst., he will embark on the steamer Aurania, of the Cunard Line, for Europe. He carries with him an offering from the faithful of his diocese to His Holiness the Pope, of $1,000, In addition to visiting the Eternal City, Bishop Jamot purposes passing through Ireland, England and France, and his visit will extend over three or four months. During his absence the Very Rev. Father P. D. Laurent, of Lindsay, will be the Administrator of dispensations and other offices.

The following facts connected with the work of the diocese, taken from an address [illegible] taking his departure, will prove of interest.

At the time of Bishop Jamot's appointment as Vicar Apostolic of Northern Canada some eleven years ago, the spiritual necessities of the few Catholics scattered over that territory were administered to by only five Jesuit Fathers. To-day, in the same territory, there are sixteen priests, thirteen Jesuits and three secular priests.

When His Lordship was appointed to the episcopate of Peterborough about three years ago, there were eleven priests in charge of the portion taken from the diocese of Kingston. At present sixteeen priests labor in the same area, making a total of 32 pirests in the entire diocese, eight of whom received ordination at the hands of Bishop Jamot.

There are at present 59 churches in the diocese, 27 of which have been erected during the administration of His Lordship, 22 in what was formerly the vicariate of Northern Canada and five in that portion annexed from Kingston. Two of these are stone, five brick, and the remainder frame.

Eight new missions with resident priests have been established; two in the southern portion, two in the Muskoka district, and others in Algoma, making in all 22 missions having at least one resident priest.

There are in the diocese 52 Catholic schools, attended by an aggregate of nearly 4,000 children, in addition to which there are convents at Port Arthur and Cobourg, and the institutions in Peterborough, Lindsay, Manitoulin Island and Fort William.

A Fine Show Case.

Clegg's establishment has completed and placed in position a handsome show case for fur caps, etc., for Fairweather & Co.'s fur store. The case is of solid walnut, beautifully made and provided with vertical sliding glass doors, of German plate, so balanced as to be easily raised. It is a fine piece of workmanship—a credit to the establishment that turned it out.

A Good Samaritan Subject.

The subject of Miss Caroline Peck's lecture to be delivered in St. John's school house, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 4th, is nursing the sick. Miss Peck is a graduate of the New York Training School for Nurses, and in view of the opening of the Nicholls hospital, the subject, ably handled, and instructive as it is certain to be, will be deeply interesting to the ladies of Peterborough. Admission, 15 cents. Doors open at 7.30, lecture at eight.

What We May Expect.

Guy Fawkes Day.

And a grand entertainment by the Orange Order.

A Hint for the Harmonists.

Toronto has a Harmony Club, but the members of the newly-formed organization of the same name here will do well not to emulate all their doings, or they are apt to belie their title. Just now they (the Toronto harmonists) are having a racket as to who shall be their conductor, apropos of which the Toronto World has the following catechismal item:—

"Father, what is the Harmony Club?

The Harmony Club, my son, is the company of the elect, as far as musical knowledge and experience is concerned.

Why do they call it the Harmony Club, father?

Because the club always works in the most harmonious and peaceful manner.

Then, why are they quarrelling now, father?

Because they cannot agree upon a conductor, my son.

Why, father, what is the matter with Schuch?

Oh! Schuch is too bumptious.

Well, father, why don't they choose some man, and have done with it?

I don't know, unless Geddes, Michie and Napier Robinson each wants to be conductor himself.

Well, I declare, father, and that is what they call the Harmony Club."

It is to be hoped the local organization will prove as harmonious in every other way as they are sure to be musically.

Good for Trade.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, in a speech, said he expected the Burmah expedition would open up a great channel for trade. He believed that markets which were now closed to British industry might be re-opened by friendly adjustment of the customs tariffs.

At the last meeting of the Women's Christian Association, the ladies were agreeably surprized by a visit from Rev. J. W. A HANDSOME LODGE ROOM.

L. O. L. No. 954, one of the strongest and most influential of the lodges in Victoria county, has displayed a commendable enterprise in fitting up and furnishing their room, and by the end of the week the work will be completed. The lodge room is in the block on Kent street, over Mr. E. Woods' store, and centrally situated. In addition to thoroughly renovating and decorating the room, a handsome new carpet has been purchased and placed on the floor. New chairs and seats have been added and a number of attractive fixtures have been replaced by new, and the organization will go ahead under the favorable auspices of having a comfortable and well appointed room for use. Mr. E. Woods is putting in the necessary fixtures for lighting with gas, and a number of handsome chandeliers and pendents have been selected. As the Canadian Order of Foresters, and possibly the local Royal Arcanum Chapter, will meet in this room, our friends of 954 will have something coming in in the way of rents as a set-off against the expenditure incurred in fitting up, which amounts to nearly $900.—Post.

Montreal's Malady.

MONTREAL, Nov. 4.—The official returns of the health office this morning show 31 smallpox deaths in the city yesterday, and 9 in the suburbs.

A statement of the mortality for the weeks ending Oct. 3, 10, 17, 24 and 31 is published to-day and shows that of 1391 deaths in the city from smallpox during that time 1286 were French Canadians, 65 other catholics and 40 Protestants.

The medical health officer reports for yesterday 45 new cases reported, 71 visits, 45 cases verified.

There are at present receiving relief from the city through the Sisters of Providence, 1,631 persons, comprising 310 families. There are 572 cases of smallpox in these families. Only 783 of the 1631 receiving relief are vaccinated. The total number of families of Protestants being relieved east of Bleury street is about ten.

There were 50 new cases of smallpox reported to-day and to [illegible]

WHITBY, Nov. 4.—The disappearance from here of Charles Nourse, the postmaster, has created intense excitement. He had been a resident of the town for upwards of thirty years, and was very highly esteemed. The Post Office Inspector has found a shortage of $2,000 in his accounts. Besides the position of postmaster, to which he was appointed three years ago, he was agent for several Insurance Companies, to which he is reported to be also somewhat indebted. His income amounted to be between two and three thousand dollars a year, and as he lived economically and had not an extravagant family, more than ordinary wonder is expressed at the defalcation. Mr. James Pringle, of Toronto, has temporary charge of the office.

On Friday evening of last week No. 5 Company assembled at the drill shed, Springville, for the purpose of presenting Mr. George Lockey with a handsome silver watch in recognition of his services in the North-West rebellion. Capt. Walsh presented the token and Lieut. Johnson read the following

ADDRESS:

SPRINGVILLE, Oct. 30, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—It is with feelings of thankfulness not unmixed with pride that we address you this evening. Thankful that an all-wise Providence guarded you through perils and dangers, shielded you from shot and shell, and permitted you to again join your friends and associates. While many of your fellow soldiers and noble leader fell while at the post of duty, for which to-night many hearts in Ontario are sad for those who sacrificed their lives in the rebellion of the Northwest. Proud that, at the call of your country, we had one amongst us that responded unhesitatingly, although he knew hardship and danger there before him, and perhaps death would be his reward. We your fellow volunteers of No. 5 Company and friends take this opportunity of expressing to you our appreciation of your services in the Northwest, and ask you as a proof to accept this watch as a slight memento, expressing the high esteem which we entertain towards you. While we hope it may never again be necessary to go forth in defence of your country, yet we are sure if the call came for men, you would not be the last to don the red coat and march to the front.

Mr. Lockey said he was very thankful for the present he had just received, and if a call ever came again for men to go forth, he was prepared to take up the cudgel in defence of his country.

Just then the string band struck up the tune "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

As was previously arranged, the affair closed with a dance. Mr. Goodfellow very kindly gave them the use of his Opera House, as the night was too cold to dance in the Drill Shed. There were about fifty couples present, and all seemed to enjoy themselves to the fullest extent.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

Hallowe'en passed off here in a quiet, orderly and sensible way, altogether creditable to the lads of this locality.

Large areas of the surface of Rice Lake, near the shore and in the bays, were covered with ice last week, thick enough to prevent the advance of the row boats.

Henry Burnham, Esq., of Port Hope, has a staff of surveyors here engaged in laying out his land in town style—that is, in streets and lots—preparatory to the big public sale.

Rev. Francis Johnstone has had his parsonage much improved by the addition of a neat verandah in front, and enlarged kitchen and woodshed in rear of the premises. Our old and respected townsman, Mr. Malcolm Campbell is the contractor.

Squire Lang is also making great improvements in the rear of his premises.

Mrs. Bradburn, of Peterborough, was here this week.

Quite a business seems to have been done at our wharf (?) this fall, judging from the numerous steamers that appear there.

Our baker, Mr. Cunningham, is gathering in his furniture for active business, and we understand he intends opening a grocery also.

The curling and skating rink syndicate have begun active operations on the agricultural shed, which they have secured. When the building is completed it will be 160 feet long and 56 feet wide, a glorious place for the roaring game and icy carnival. It is still to be used as an agricultural shed at township or county shows, if required.

The social at Rev. Francis Johnstone's passed off very successfully—the house was crowded and everyone pleased. The entertainment, after refreshment, was decidedly jolly, as the boys say; songs, readings, recitations, etc., making the time pass with delightful rapidity, and it was late when the merry-makers reached their homes.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodits Church here purpose giving one of these socials every fortnight throughout the winter. The next one will be held at the house of Mr. Kenneth Mark, teacher, on Wednesday evening next, the 11th inst. The Presbyterians also are talking of organizing "mite meetings" in aid of church funds. If these also occur regularly, we will be quite gay this season.

A general meeting of the Scott Act workers is called for Wednesday next, Nov. 11th, at 1.30 p. m., in the Y.M.C.A. rooms in Peterborough. As most important business is to be transacted, it is very necessary that all who can should attend without fail.

The Eastern Crisis.

On the Verge.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The Standard says: The Servian army has been ordered to advance into Bulgarian territory. It is expected the army will enter Bulgaria to-day.

BELGRADE, Nov. 4.—It is stated positively that King Milan does not intend to invade Bulgaria, but is resolved to declare against Bulgaria unless the status quo ante be restored in order to preserve the balance of power. The Queen and Court ladies supervise the preparation of linen for the Servian army which is encamped at Kauzantz. Ambulance and munition waggons leave daily for the frontier.

Reserves Called Out.

BELGRADE, Nov. 4.—A proclamation has been issued calling out the second class of reserves, numbering 12,000 men.

Building Redoubts.

Nish, Nov. 4.—The Bulgarians are entrenching Klissura and Selishte and building redoubts at Tzaribrod. The officers of all Servian divisions have been ordered to assume the offensive.

Conveyance of Troops.

PESTH, Nov. 4.—A military commission has inspected Demesvar and other towns for accommodations for wounded soldiers. It is reported that the traffic on the railroad from Brod in Bosnia to Zerajevo has been stopped four days, in order to facilitate the conveyance of Austrian troops.

The Riel Case.

An Orange View.

TORONTO, Nov. 4.—The Orange Sentinel will, to-morrow, contain an editorial on the proposed lunacy commission in the case of Riel. After protesting vigorously the hole and corner work, the Sentinel goes on to say: "We can assure all concerned that English-speaking Canadians in the present crisis are not prepared to accept a cook-and-bull story, cooked verdict of insanity to please the French element of Quebec. If Riel is reprieved for any reason, they will require to be informed, without circumlocution, of the naked facts which justified such a course. If, on the other hand, the law is permitted to take its course, a page of Canadian history will be closed, which is not creditable to many of the principal actors concerned."

Sir Leonard's Shoes.

OTTAWA, Nov. 4.—Writs for the election in the city of St. John, New Brunswick, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Sir Leonard Tilly, were sent out to-day. The nomination is on the 7th and polling on the 24th inst.

The State Elections.

The Democrats in the recent United State elections, carried New York by from 20,000 to 40,000, and elected Lee in Virginia by 10,000. Maryland and Mississippi are also Democratic as usual. Massachussette, Iowa and Nebraska have been carried by the Republicans as usual, and the Connecticut Legislature is Republican.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1885.

ENGLAND'S WAIFS AND STRAYS

A very great deal of interest has been excited on the subject of the emigration of children, during recent years in England. The cost of supporting pauper children is somewhat excessive, averaging in eighteen of the large district and separate schools of London, a sum amounting to over one hundred and twenty-five dollars per head yearly. This great outlay has roused philanthropists to discuss plans by which they may aid the waifs and strays of Britain's overcrowded cities, either to grow up useful members of society at home, or to start afresh in life on this side of the Atlantic. The majority seem to favor emigration as a panacea for the evil complained of, and it behoves us therefore as colonists to consider the question and to enquire how it will affect us.

The pauperism of London especially, the wealthiest city in the world, is something astounding. Out of the 57,000 children receiving indoor relief in England and Wales, no less than 11,000 are in London alone! And to this host of paupers, we must add the thousands who live practically on the streets and know nothing of the comforts of home.

Among the plans devised for the better care and training of these unfortunates, the ordinary method is to crowd numbers of them together in monster schools, where everything is done by rule, in exact routine, and all needful mechanical appliances are at hand. In its results the plan works badly. The inmates are not required to think or act independently, and little opportunity is given for imparting lessons of honesty, industry and self-reliance. The consequence is, that when a girl from one of these large schools secures a situation of some sort, either in this country or in England, she is, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, an incompetent, and if left to herself, gets suddenly bewildered, gives up her situation shortly in despair, sinks under the temptations which beset her, or else returns to the workhouse a confirmed pauper. It is an unfortunate truth that the number of girls reported as doing well on leaving such schools is much smaller in proportion than that of the boys

Another plan is to send these pauper children to be brought up in small certified village homes, under the supervision of a respectable local committee. Here the inmates are carefully taught housework, or some useful trade, such as gardening, carpentering, etc., and are at the same time educated in the subjects of reading, writing and arithmetic. The children are also allowed to mix with other village children, and are early accustomed to act independently. The homes are, in fact, what their name implies, and the inmates are not crowded in wards, nor jumbled together without regard to age or sex. The act governing them provides, that not over a certain specified number shall be in any one home. When children leave these smaller houses, experience proves that they generally turn out industrious, law-abiding citizens, and lose all trace of pauperism. Moreover, the outlay for maintenance is not over one half of what the children in large workhouses cost. In Scotland particularly, such homes are eminently successful.

The third way in which England endeavours to cope with this difficulty of pauper children is to ship them off to the colonies. This is the cheapest, and perhaps all things considered, the most effective way that has ever been proposed. If any reliance is to be placed upon statistics it has accomplished much good already.

Miss Rye is well known as the pioneer in the work of bringing boys and girls to Canada. She has a Home for immigrant children near Niagara, and during the sixteen years in which she has been engaged in the work, she has distributed over 2,000 children. In a paper read before the British Association she stated that at least 97 per cent. of these children had done well, and that in 15 years there had been only four deaths out of this large number above stated. She declares that 10,000 children have been provided with suitable homes in Canada since 1869. Other workers in this direction are Miss Bellborough, of Belleville, Miss Bart, Dr. Stephenson and Dr. Barnardo.

It ought to be borne in mind that, while Canada can absorb large numbers of suitable immigrants, she has a very strong objection to all whose characters and antecedents make it probable that they will become either paupers or criminals. We do not want shiftless creatures, without morality and with no habits of self-reliance. From the large workhouse schools, especially, no children should be sent here until they have received some suitable preparatory training. A very serious responsibility rests upon those charged with the duty of bringing children here, to select them with the utmost judgment and discretion. Moreover, in their new homes, these immigrants should be under careful inspection or supervision for a definite period. This can be well effected by means of the agents or heads of the distributing houses.

We believe Dr. Barnardo's work pays particular attention to the above essentials, and, in consequence, it receives the hearty and continued support of all interested in reclaiming paupers and criminals from idleness and vice.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The government rebellion loss commissioners are still hard at work investigating claims and preparing their report for submission to the government.

In the list of "revising barristers" appointed for Quebec, only seven of the sixty-eight appointed are judges. Judge Monsseau is among the judges selected.

The Truro Guardian says, in reference to the rumor that Sir Charles Tupper is to be made a Baron, that it is understood his title is to be Baron Monchausen.

Nearly all the scrip to be given the half-breeds in the Northwest this season has been issued. The total number to be issued is 1,900, and of this 1,500 have been issued.

This is the way it works. Last year the Grand Trunk paid in duty on the coal consumed $151,514.10. The workmen employed on the road had to pay this tax, for the addition this tax made to working expenses made it necessary to reduce the rate of wages. Besides the workingmen had to pay an equivalent of ten per cent. of his reduced wages in taxes on the coal they used themselves. Verily, the N. P. is a big boon.

Dominion Doings.

Lieutenant Imlah and forty men of B battery left Qu'Appelle for Quebec on the 26th ult.

Messrs. Davis & Sons, cigar manufacturers of Montreal, are importing 200 skilled operatives from Germany.

John Esterbee, the murderer who is lying in Welland jail awaiting his execution, sleeps about sixteen hours a day and fills up the balance of the time in eating and playing checkers with the guards,

The temperance people of Toronto will run W. H. Howland as the prohibitionist candidate for the mayoralty. Mayor Manning and Ald. Dafoe are also out.

It is estimated that the cost of the through C. P. R. first train between Montreal and Winnipeg was $67,000.

There are two murder cases before the Montreal court of Queen's bench. Both victims are policemen.

Work was commenced at Thorold Monday on the Niagara Central and St. Catharines railroad.

Major Draper, chief of the Toronto police force, will shortly be compelled to resign owing to ill health.

During the past month 465 immigrants arrived in Toronto. Of this number 341 remained in Ontario. During October last year, there were 798 arrivals, 408 remaining in Ontario.

The Queen at Balmoral.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The Queen is remaining at Balmoral later than usual this year, and it is reported she will not return to Windsor till the close of the present month. This is causing some wonder, as her residence in Scotland during the busy period prior to the dissolution of Parliament will necessitate her Ministers making many hurried visits to Balmoral. The fact is her Majesty's health is very far from satisfactory, and she postpones as long as possible returning to the atmosphere of London, which she finds far more trying than the cold, bracing breezes of Scotland.

Why We Call the Cat "Puss."

Do you ever think why we call the cat puss? A great many years ago the people of Egypt worshipped the cat. They thought the cat was like the moon, because she was more active at night and because her eyes change just as the moon changes, which is sometimes full and sometimes a bright, little crescent, or half-moon, as we may say. Did you ever notice pussy's eyes to see how they change? So these people made an idol with a cat's head and named it Pashi, the same name they gave to the moon; for the word means the face of the moon. That word has been changed to pas or puss, the name which almost every one gives to the cat. Puss and pussy-cat are pet names for kitty everywhere. But few people know that it was given to her thousand of years ago.

In the Land of Nods and Clay Pipes.
